MANY KILLED IN BATTLES

AWFUL WINTER PROSPECT

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Friday, Oct. 25.—While the capture by the Bulgarians of Kirk-Kilisseh, which is the feature of to-day's news from the Balkan war, is regarded as the first great success of the struggle, military experts here are inclined to wait for further news before estimating its importance.

It is evident that the position was stubbornly contested by the Turks, but whether their main force has yet come into action is uncertain.

Description of the Battle.

The Daily Chronicle's correspondent at the Bulgarian headquarters in Stara-Zagora, telegraphing at 8 o'clock last evening, said:

"I have just been officially informed at headquarters that Kirk-Kilisseh has been captured by the Bulgarian forces. It fell at 11 o'clock this morning. The battle lasted two days, during which the town was bombarded.

"Under cover of a heavy artillery fire the infantry attacked on two sides, and the positions were finally carried at the point of the bayonet.

"The Turkish losses were heavy. Twelve hundred prisoners were taken, besides Krupp guns, quick-firing guns, wagons, and a large quantity of ammunition.

"The Turks are now in full retreat toward Visa on the main road to Constantinople. They fought a rear guard action, but in this the Bulgarians were again victorious."

The Daily Mail's Vienna correspondent sends a dispatch, mailed from before Adrianople. This says:

"The decisive phase of the battle began on Tuesday, when the first army under Gen. Ivanoff executed an attack on the outworks of the fortress in two large bodies.

"The northern body marched on both sides of the River Tundja with the right wing, west of Havaras, seven miles north of Adrianople, with the centre east of Tundja, near Arnautkevi, six miles northeast of the city, and with the left wing, advancing from the northeast via Musubeili, seven miles east-northeast of Adrianople along the road from Kirk-Kilisseh to Adrianople.

Brilliant Dash of Bulgarians.

"On the west another division simultaneously attacked the Turkish lines and heights of Chatalja, about four miles west of the city.

"South of the River Maritza a strong Bulgarian column attacked the Turkish positions in the valley of the Arda River and rolled the whole Turkish position up.

"The Bulgarians crossed the sandbanks of the Arda, north of Simenli, fifteen miles southwest of Adrianople, and advanced.

"This brilliantly executed dash across the Arda caused a panic among the Turks, who set off in a straggling retreat toward Adrianople, leaving more than 100 dead and losing 160 prisoners.

"The dawn of yesterday (Wednesday) saw fighting resumed all along the line. The Northern Bulgarian columns captured several advanced points of Adrianople with the bayonet, and then pressed forward toward the fortress. At 11 A. M. the Turks delivered a counter attack with great bravery toward the northeast, in the direction of Arnautkevi. Though well supported by artillery, the Turks were repulsed. Their retreat swept away with it men

MISS ELKINS REPORTED WED.

Rome Hears That She Is the Bride of William Hitt.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—The Rome correspondent of the Eclair states that Miss Katherine Elkins, daughter of the late Senator Stephen B. Elkins, has just been married to her American suitor, William Hitt.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—William Hitt and Miss Katherine Elkins were in Washington within a week or ten days, having returned from Europe. It was understood here to-night that Miss Elkins had gone to Elkins, West Va., where her mother has a large estate. Mr. Hitt and Miss Elkins have been together constantly for several years, and there have been repeated rumors that they were engaged. The Elkins family has declined to make any comment on these rumors, which were coupled occasionally with reports that the couple were married.

The marriage rumor has been denied privately by a representative of the Elkins family, and is not credited in Washington.

MISS JOURNEAY MUST PAY.

Custom House Demands $2,127 for the Release of Her Baggage.

Because of her failure to declare the proper value of dutiable articles purchased abroad, Gen. Nelson Henry, Surveyor of the Port, ordered the seizure yesterday of the trunks and handbags belonging to Miss Katherine Journeay of 225 West Eighty-sixth Street, who arrived on Tuesday by the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, accompanied by her mother.

In her declaration made out before reaching port Miss Journeay stated that the dutiable articles in her trunks amounted to less than $500, but when questioned on the pier at Hoboken by Acting Deputy Surveyor Norwood she admitted there was an error in the declaration, and the baggage was ordered sent to the Appraiser's Stores for examination.

The Appraisers discovered that not only had the articles in the declaration been enumerated below their proper value, but also foreign-made articles valued at $758 were in the trunks, which had not been mentioned.

At the Custom House yesterday when questioned by Special Deputy Surveyor Smythe as to why she had not properly declared the articles in her baggage which were liable to duty, Miss Journeay said that the errors were due to her ignorance of the customs regulations.

After ordering the trunks to be seized, Surveyor Henry, who was present at the hearing, informed the young woman that she could obtain the release of her baggage on payment of the home value of the articles, which is the foreign value plus the duty. The foreign value amounted to $1,355, mostly wearing apparel, which with duty made a total of $2,127.78. Miss Journeay told the Surveyor that she was willing to pay the fine and duty imposed by the Government, and left the Custom House to get the money, but had not returned by closing time.

The duty, amounting to $7,200, on the pearl necklace brought in by Mrs. H. B. Duryea on the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria on Tuesday has not yet been paid, as Mr. Duryea, through his lawyer, lodged a protest, and the pearls remain locked up in the Appraiser's Stores.

STATE INSURES CITIZENS.

Ekern during the past year, and the tables furnished to applicants contain the result of the long statistical investigations of the department staff.

The plan provides that any citizen of Wisconsin living a normal, healthy life may take out a policy after passing a medical examination under the supervision of the State Board of Health. Applicants must be between 20 and 50 years old, and may choose any of the following plans of insurance: Ordinary life, twenty-payment life, ten-year endowment, and endowment at the age of 65.

CONEY ISLAND HOTEL BURNS.

Five Alarms Sent In for Frame Structure Which Is Destroyed.

At 1:30 o'clock this morning fire started in Herring's Hotel at the foot of West Twenty-first Street, Coney Island, and within three-quarters of an hour had totally destroyed it. Five alarms were turned in in swift succession, and after the first half-hour of fire fighting all the assembled energies of the department were bent on preventing the spread of flames to the Majestic Hotel, across the street. A strong wind was blowing out to sea, thus checking the danger of the flames spreading to the Kaiser Garten, a resort on the other side of Surf Avenue. No lives were lost, and no one was injured.

Herring's Hotel was a three-story frame structure, equipped with bathing pavilion, dance hall and restaurant. It is some distance beyond Steeplechase, and fully a half mile from Luna, and the amusement heart of the island.

WILL ATTACKS DAUGHTER.

Mother Leaves Mrs. Berg $5, Saying She Broke Her Heart.

Mrs. Louisa Warner, who died in this city April 18, 1910, said in her will that her daughter, Mrs. Alice Ogilby Titcomb Druse Berg of Paris, France, should receive only $5 of her estate. The report on the appraisal of the property was filed in the Transfer Tax Office of the Surrogates' Court yesterday, and showed the estate to be worth $343. In regard to the small bequest, she said:

"I make this provision for reasons well known to the said Edith and myself, and because of her lies and behavior that have broken my heart. It is my will that this provision be in lieu of any bequest whatsoever."

BOY IN A ROWBOAT DRIFTS OUT TO SEA

All last evening the police boat Patrol passed up and down off Sea Gate, sweeping the waters of the Atlantic with her searchlight, and all last evening the wireless operator in the Marconi Station at Sea Gate filled the air with appeals to the coastwise craft coming in past Scotland Lightship and the Hook to keep a careful lookout, for late in the afternoon a little truant schoolboy and a big, shaggy mongrel dog had drifted out to sea in a rowboat.

The boy was eleven-year-old Clinton Fox of Surf Avenue and West Twenty-fifth Street, Coney Island, son of Peter Fox, a druggist, working in Ancelin's store in Surf Avenue. The last seen of him was at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when three persons standing on the bluff at Norton's Point peered out through the gathering dusk and mist and far off could just discern what looked like a rowboat bobbing up and down. It was so far away that they could not tell whether or not the boat was right side up.

Shortly after 11 o'clock the rowboat was washed ashore at the foot of West Fiftieth Street. The boy was gone and the dog and only the boy's shoes remained in the boat. It is supposed that he tried his luck with the surf, but he was not a good swimmer, and among the watchers who gathered around the boat at midnight there was none who could see any hope that he had been saved.

Clinton's adventure began with the close of the noon recess at Public School 80 in West Seventeenth Street near Neptune Avenue. Instead of going back to the uneventful class-room, he and his chum, Will Taylor of 2,930 West Twenty-second Street, decided that the time had come for them to play hookey.

Find No-Account Dog.

In high glee at their independence they took to the Gravesend Bay shore and to their great delight ran immediately into the perpetual truant, Big Tim, the utterly disreputable and no-account dog that had been hanging ownerless around Coney all Summer. Tim was the friendliest soul in the world and his melting eyes got him free meals and spared him from the dog-catchers. Tim bounded up to the boys and the three gamboled along the shore, all irresponsible and purposeless, until they came upon a rowboat tied to a small dock. It was oarless but a little scouting by the Fox boy soon remedied that defect, and a few moments later the three were sailing away in quest of adventure. It was then about 2 o'clock.

After two hours of cruising in Gravesend Bay and a visit to the surf in front of the Atlantic Yacht Club, the craft was headed for Norton's Point, the extreme western end of Sea Gate. Off Norton's Point is the Potato Patch, the choppiest bit of water in these parts, and from there stretches the Atlantic. The Potato Patch has been the scene of many drownings and many a light craft has come to grief there. The two boys found it impossible to navigate, and before they knew it, their boat bumped into a jutting bulkhead below the home of Herbert D. Jones, a produce merchant, whose big house sits high on the bluff.

The impact was so sudden that the Taylor boy was thrown into the surf, always rough at that point, and unusually rough under the play of the southeast winds that brought the rains. With him went the oars and as he struggled, with all his Coney boy's skill at swimming, he saw his friend drifting away in the boat, the yellow dog standing with his paws on a seat and howling dismally. He called out to the boy in the boat that he was all right, and then he joined his cries to the screams of Clinton Fox and the wailing of the mongrel, as he started to swim through the breakers to shore.

Maid Hears a Faint Cry.

Even above the pounding of the surf, his cries rose faintly to the Jones home, and a maid paused at the window and listened. Strain her ears as she would, only the roar of the Atlantic came, but she was sure those were cries of distress that she had heard. She was so sure that she ran out and waved her apron to the outside man. He came forward, and she soon had him running down to the shore. Then she called Patrolmen Bohmke from the street, and followed with him, with her apron pulled up over her shivering shoulders.

Down there at the foot of the bluff they found a little boy, lying unconscious on the sand. It was Will Taylor. They carried him to the house, and under their ministrations his eyes opened even before the arrival of the doctor from Coney Island Hospital. When he could talk, bit by bit, they got the story from him. He remembered his unending struggle through the surf. He did not know how long it took nor how he did it. He remembered crawling on shore and then he fainted. One thing he feared. He thought that when the boat struck the bulkhead a hole had been dug in her side. He did not know how big a hole nor how much it lessened the chances of the other boy's ever being found. It was then that the policeman and the maid and the gardener went to the bluff, and, peering out to sea, saw far off through the gathering dusk and mist something that looked like a rowboat bobbing up and down.

THIEVES IN AUTO WRECK CAR.

Mistake Policeman's Warning to Avoid Live Wire as Menace of Arrest.

A solitary policeman who stood at Broad and Walnut Streets in Newark just before dawn yesterday morning and signaled to every passing vehicle that the storm had swept down an electric wire near by had a startling effect on the uneasy consciences of four men who came along in a roomy maroon touring car.

At the sight of the waving official arm the chauffeur raised the speed to sixty-five miles an hour and shot along the slippery paving with such sudden acceleration that the car skidded, crashed into the curb, and halted, a mere wreck of its former beauty. The four men jumped to the sidewalk, shed their dusters, and fled.

After a chase which netted the authorities one negro suspect, the surprised policeman inspected the car and found inside a puzzling collection of $800 worth of unused stamps and a batch of registered letters and parcels. All the registered articles concerned Perth Amboy, N. J. A few moments later the police of Newark advised the police of Perth Amboy to look at their Post Office. They did, and found that it had been entered in the night.

One safe had been blown open with nitro-glycerine. An effort had been made to force another safe that contained between $2,000 and $3,000 in cash, but without success. In the effort, however, the lock had been so disarranged that the Post Office force itself was unable to open it.

CZAROWITCH NOW HAS PERITONITIS

St. Petersburg Rumor That His Condition Is Not the Result of an Accident.

CZAR'S CAPTAIN A SUICIDE

Commander of Imperial Yacht, on Which Mishap to Heir to Throne Occurred, Shoots Himself.

[Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Friday, Oct. 25, 1 A. M.—The condition of the Czar's son remains serious. Prayers for his recovery continue throughout Russia.

His Imperial Highness is now suffering from peritonitis.

It is impossible to ascertain the real cause of his illness. I give with all reserve a rumor that the "accident" was not caused by his own act.

Rear-Admiral Chagin, commander of the imperial yacht Standart, committed suicide at 6 o'clock yesterday morning with a rifle. The barrel was filled with water, and the force of the discharge almost separated the head from the body.

One report attributes the suicide to a love affair. Another is that the reason for the Admiral's death was of a grave political nature.

Current rumors, however, attribute the Admiral's suicide to remorse over the illness of the Czarowitch Alexis, which is reported to have been the result of an accident while the little Prince was on board the Standart. It is said that the Prince injured himself while imitating sailors diving, although it is positively affirmed that he slipped and fell in his bath.

It is reported to-night that a lady for whom Admiral Chagin had vainly waited, arrived later, and, finding him dead, also commited suicide.

Admiral Chagin spent the previous night in writing letters to relatives. He left a note on the table saying: "I ask that no one shall be accused of my death."

He was a great favorite with the royal family. He led the Russian naval detachment in the relief of Peking and commanded the cruiser Almaz at the battle of Tgushima.

WARSAW, Oct. 24.—Dr. Raum, a well-known surgeon, has been summoned to Spala for consultation regarding the condition of the Czarevitch.

The young Prince is suffering from an injury in the groin and an abscess has formed, which will probably necessitate an operation.

The Prince spent a comparatively good day, suffering moderate pain. The evening temperature was 101.8; pulse, 136.

Alexis, Czarevitch of Russia, was born on Aug. 12, 1904, and is consequently eight years and three months old. He is the fifth child of the Czar and was born after his parents had been married nearly ten years. As he is the only son of the Czar, his illness is causing the most intense anxiety in the Russian Empire.

In connection with his birth a curious story is told. The Russian Czarina was the Princess Alexandra of Hesse and was a Lutheran by early training. When her marriage to the Czar had been arranged it became necessary for her to adopt the Greek orthodox faith. John of Kronstadt, the famous Russian monk, was sent to convert her, and one day, wearied with his exhortations, the story goes, the Princess sent him away. As he left her presence he turned and cursed her. He declared that she should bear seven daughters before she gave an heir to the empire. When the first four of her children were daughters the tale was remembered and it was really believed that she and the Czar were under the curse of heaven.

Little is known of the upbringing of the Czarevitch, but what has been permitted to be published has always spoken of the simple life which he has led with his sisters. However the cares and dangers of their position might affect his parents, he was safe behind the bayonets of the Imperial Guard, and has passed a quiet existence in the country palaces of the Czar. From time to time pictures have been published of the future Czar of all the Russias dressed in sailor's clothes and engaged in the happy pursuits of childhood.

$2,000,000 COPPER DIVIDEND.

$3,000,000 So Far Paid on Morgan-Guggenheim Alaska Property.

The richest copper mine in the world, the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate property, which, for the past eighteen months has been shipping ore from its mountain of phenomenally rich copper ore in Alaska, has declared a dividend of $2,000,000 on its $2,500,000 capital stock.

The mine, which is known as the Bonanza Copper Mine, and is owned by the Kennecott Mines Company, in turn a close corporation owned by the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate, was brought into connection with the smelters at Seattle by the opening up of the Copper River Railroad. Much of the ore shipped was almost pure copper.

The dividend just declared is the second within the past eighteen months, the first having been a $1,000,000 disbursement declared last February. The company does not make public annual reports, and it is not mentioned in the standard financial reference books.

TO BE SENTENCED ON OCT. 30

LIEUT. CHARLES BECKER.

Lieut. Charles Becker was found guilty at 11:57 o'clock last night of murder in the first degree for having inspired and instigated the assassination in the early morning of last July 16 of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, who, on the day of his death, was to have revealed to District Attorney Whitman how Becker had been his "silent partner" in his Forty-fifth Street gambling house. The verdict was found after just nine hours and thirty-seven minutes of deliberation by the jury.

The verdict was a terrible blow to Becker, for, up to the last moment, he had confidently expected to be acquitted, counting the long delay of the jury as an augury in his favor. His reception of the words which branded him as the taker of human life and condemned him to listen on next Wednesday to Justice Goff's sentence of death revealed him as a stronger man than even the accusations of "Billiard Ball" Jack Rose, "Bridgey" Webber, Harry Vallon, and Sam Schepps had painted him, a stronger man than even he had shown himself to be in the nineteen days of his trial.

For Becker, by an exhibition of that marvelous will which had sustained him throughout the trial, stood bravely as Foreman Harold B. Skinner pronounced the verdict and as juror after juror assented that the verdict was his. But it was more than Becker's flesh could stand without yielding. He crumpled and seemed about to fall again and again. He gripped the rail behind him to keep from sliding in a heap at the foot of Justice Goff's bench, but never once did his direct gaze at the jury flinch, never did a change of expression come over his face.

He could not control his muscles. Under the shock they acted strangely and as never before during the trial, but the accused Lieutenant could control his glance, could keep it firm and steady, and could find the strength in his greatest hour of need to face the men who had convicted him and the Justice who had presided at his trial. Never from the moment that he entered the room at 11:54 o'clock did Becker take a seat.

Goff's Return Presaged Verdict.

It was nine minutes before—at 11:45 exactly—that some telepathic message seemed to warn the crowds waiting in the corridor that a verdict was about to be found. No word of this came from the jury room, but fifteen minutes before Justice Goff had arrived at the Criminal Court Building from the Museum of Natural History, where he had spent the early evening listening to a lecture by Rodman Wanamaker, and had gone straight to his chambers.

With the sudden, uneasy feeling that a verdict was nearly due which swept over every one in the corridors at the same moment, there was a rush for the big double door of Part I., Trial Term, Supreme Court, the room in which Harry Thaw had been tried, and before him Nan Patterson, and before her Roland B. Molineaux.

The rush swept Head Door Tender John Ward almost off his feet. More than 100 men piled inside the room, and after Ward finally got the door closed another rush burst it open and fifteen or twenty more entered.

District Attorney Whitman had entered at 11:49 exactly, and four minutes later the jury, looking stern, uneasy, worried, but determined, filed from the jury room and took their seats in the jury box. Each man had his coat over his arm and his hat in his hand.

It was an instant later that Becker walked in, escorted by his usual guard of two Deputy Sheriffs, and took his place beside the counsel table. His chief counsel, John F. McIntyre, looking worn and wearied to the point of collapse, was already in his seat. Beside him were his associates, John W. Hart, Lloyd Stryker, and George W. Whiteside.

Becker had scarcely entered the room when the door from Justice Goff's chambers opened, his secretary, Thomas Kearney, rapped smartly on the rail as a warning that the Justice was approaching, and then Justice Goff mounted the bench, bowed to the jury, and took his seat.

McIntyre Sought to Delay It.

Mr. McIntyre rose wearily in his seat and, addressing the court, tried to speak. The noise in the courtroom was so great, however, that Justice Goff called:

"Wait a minute, Mr. McIntyre. Wait a minute." He was forced to repeat his order three times before he could make himself heard, for the Justice spoke in a feeble voice, a voice much lower than that with which he had delivered his charge, and, in the excitement of this moment, the throng in the courtroom were not sitting calmly and quietly in their seats. Instead they were standing and craning their heads forward, striving to catch the least word of the proceedings.

The Justice ordered the court officers to have the noise stopped, and when finally it subsided a little Mr. McIntyre made himself heard, saying:

"The defendant at the bar asks that the testimony of the witnesses in Hot Springs be read to this jury in advance of any verdict."

"Denied," was the one word which fell from Justice Goff's lips, and Mr. McIntyre responded as briefly: "Exception."

Clerk Penny arose then and began the calling of the roll. As the jurors answered to their names Becker nervous, but not alarmed, watched them eagerly, for in him was still the hope that the verdict would be one to send his friends rushing to him to clasp his hand, would send his wife to his arms, and, finally, would send him a free man out of the courtroom and on his way to his home in the Bronx.

At last the roll was ended, and a hush fell over the room as the clerk, turning to the jury, asked the question:

Guilty As Charged.

"You have found a verdict, gentlemen?"

Foreman Skinner and the others of the jury had arisen to their feet, and in a firm voice Mr. Skinner replied:

"We have."

"How do you find?" came glibly from the clerk, and Skinner, hesitating just an instant, replied in a tone audible throughout the court room:

A hush fell over the room. Every eye was turned on Becker, and it was then he showed the strength of will that was in him. He gulped as though he were striving desperately to swallow something that had risen suddenly in his throat. He gulped again and his lips opened as though he would cry out. But with a wrench he snapped them shut again. His hand shot to his tie, and fumbled with it. Often he had fumbled with it before in moments of great tension. His body drew more erect, if that were possible, his head snapped back so that his eyes rested level with the eyes of the jury, and he stood there, looking at them, holding himself together by sheer will power.

The clerk's voice broke in on the stillness and it was several seconds before any one seemed to realize that he was asking:

"You find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and so say you all?"

There was a chorused "yes" from the jurors, and then their names were read and the question was put to each: "Is that your verdict?"

Almost Collapses Under the Blow.

As each man answered "It is," Becker stood watching them, still striving to hold himself upright, still trying to seem as though he did not care, but the man's body would not obey his will. It seemed as though he were gradually shrinking before the eyes of the spectators. His shoulders sagged, his head drooped, he was on the point of complete collapse when he exerted his mind to pull his body together. Slowly he grew erect again, slowly his shoulders forced themselves back as though they had to move a great weight, slowly his head rose till his eyes were on a level with the jury, and from those eyes flashed a glance of surprise, of stunned amazement, but a glance which had in it nothing of fear, nothing of terror.

The strain was too great though. From juror after juror had come that damning phrase, dispeller of Becker's last hope, "It is my verdict," and there were still other answers to come. Again Becker's great body—he is a big man—began to sag, again he began to sink toward the floor, and to save himself this last ignominy, he clutched at the rail behind him. His knuckles shone white through the blood-reddened skin of his hands.

Two court attendants sprang toward him. It was evident they thought him about to fall. Their presence seemed to be the last driving incentive the Lieutenant needed. Once more he slowly grew into his old arrogant self, and once more the look that was half a sneer came into his eyes. But the attendants were taking no chances. They clutched an arm on either side, and while Becker stood there for the few more minutes that his torture was to last they held to him with grips which, had his knees bent beneath him, would have held him upright before the eyes of the jury.

"Is there any other business before this court?"

Court Takes His Pedigree.

There came no response, and then a court attendant stepped to Becker's side, asked him to raise his right hand, and demanded:

"Do you solemnly swear to true answers make to the questions asked you?"

Becker inclined his head as he took the oath, and then his pedigree was taken, showing that he was an American by birth, that his parents were born in Germany, that he was 42 years old, that his home was 3,239 Olinville Avenue, the

As Becker concluded his answers Mr. McIntyre rose and asked that all proceedings in the case be adjourned for one week to let him make necessary motions for an appeal.

To be Sentenced on Oct. 30.

Justice Goff replied that he would adjourn the case until next Wednesday, and turning to the clerk he said:

"Remanded until Oct. 30."

And then Becker was led between his two attendants back to the Tombs, whence he will be brought on next Wednesday to hear sentence passed upon him.

Becker as he passed out looked at the reporters who had watched him for nineteen days, and tried to smile at them as he had smiled occasionally throughout the trial, but only a muscle in his cheek twitched. Then, looking sternly ahead, he passed from the room, over the Bridge of Sighs, and back into the Tombs.

Behind him Becker left an excited court room. It was 12:02 o'clock, and already many persons had made a break for the door. They had been forced back to their seats—the great majority of them—but a few had passed through the door which, it appeared, was unbolted, and now again a rush occurred. Court attendants shouted orders, Justice Goff rapped heavily on his desk, but still others got out before the doors were locked and order restored. Then Justice Goff turned to the jury and said:

"Gentlemen, there rests on you no obligation to tell any person the nature of your deliberations. I advise you not to make these public, but to keep them to yourselves. I thank you for your close attention."

And then the jury passed from the room, and behind them rushed the throng anxious to reach telephones and newspaper offices.

Jurors File Out by Mrs. Becker.

In the hall they passed a weeping woman who was clinging to Mr. McIntyre and whispering: "I thank you just as much as if my husband had been acquitted. You did your best." And Mr. McIntyre, almost in tears himself, was reassuring her with promises of an appeal and a reversal, a new trial, and a probable acquittal.

The woman was Mrs. Becker. When Lieut. Becker was summoned to hear the verdict she had accompanied her husband as far as the door of the courtroom from the room on the mezzanine floor, where they had stayed while the jury was deliberating. She stopped at the threshold, bravely shook her husband's hand, and when he had disappeared through the door stood where he had left her, partly supported by her brother-in-law and her sister Mr. and Mrs. Lynch.

For some five minutes she stood with her head pressed against the closed door of the courtroom, until Capt. Tierney of the Elizabeth Street Station found her a chair and one for her sister. Then Mrs. Becker sat leaning against the door, her head still pressed tightly against it, while her friends tried to cheer her. Again and again Capt. Tierney and others knocked and battered at the locked doors, but in vain.

Suddenly the doors were thrown violently open, and a man ran out crying, "Guilty!" Mrs. Becker turned pale. She did not sob. She looked about as though dazed, then reeled from her chair and fainted. Her sister and brother-in-law picked her up and carried her to a bench in the corridor. She regained consciousness later, but it was long before she had sufficiently regained her composure to be taken home.

Supported by two women friends Mrs. Becker, as soon as she could be moved, was taken to the prison floor, where she rested on a bench until her strength returned. At 12:50 o'clock this morning she came down the stairs to the street escorted by her friends and relatives. She wore a white sweater and over it a long blue coat, while her head was almost completely muffled in a shawl. The wife who had borne herself so bravely throughout the trial had reached the main floor and was walking toward Franklin Street, when she heard a faint yell or trill coming from the third floor immediately over the Bridge of Sighs.

Becker Throws Kisses to Her.

The great crowd which had gathered in the building to hear the verdict looked up and was startled to see a man leaning far out over the south balcony which surrounds the interior court of the Criminal Court Building. The man was Becker. He took off his hat and threw two kisses to the point where he supposed his wife to be.

Mrs. Becker did not see her husband at first. But several persons in the party called her attention to her husband. Then Becker threw a third kiss, and his devoted wife looked up just in time to receive it. The next instant court attendants caught Becker by the shoulders, jerked him in from the balcony, and took him across the Bridge of Sighs.

Mrs. Becker was so affected by her husband's thought of her that she fainted for a second time. She was again revived and slowly led toward the Franklin Street door. It was locked. Her friends then took Mrs. Becker toward the storm door on the White Street side of the building, one member carrying a chair. Every few steps it was necesssary for her to sit down and rest. Then she would stagger along a few feet, only to sink into the chair again. Her friends were much worried for Mrs. Becker, because she is soon to become a mother.

At 12:25 o'clock this morning Mr. Whitman walked down the corridor in the direction of the White Street door. His face was set and he looked neither to the right nor to the left. A reporter approached him to ask a question, but Mr. Whitman brushed him aside, hurried by the party that screened Mrs. Becker, and walked out of the door seemingly unaware that he had been within two feet of the woman whose husband he had so relentlessly prosecuted and convicted.

Mrs. Becker was later taken away from the court house in an automobile, to the home of her sister. Before departure from the building she sent this message to the newspaper reporters, through her brother-in-law:

"I was so shocked. I could not believe it. To think that this thing has happened to my husband. It seems impossible."

McIntyre Expects Reversal.

Mr. McIntyre, when he had been able to turn Mrs. Becker over to friends, declared that the verdict had amazed him. He looked as though it had, for his face had become florid and his eyes seemed bulging from their sockets.

"There is not the slightest doubt that there will be a reversal of this verdict in a higher court. I cannot and will not say anything more."

John W. Hart said simply: "I agree with Mr. McIntyre. I have nothing further to say."

When the jurors left the courtroom a few minutes before the lawyers they were escorted by policemen and court attendants down the flight of stairs leading almost from the courtroom door to the ground floor beneath. A crowd of excited persons jammed around them and volleyed questions at them. While the questions were shouted the men who had convicted Becker walked to the Franklin Street exit from the building.

Capt. Tierney mustered his men about them and tried hard to protect the jurors, who seemed very nervous, but reporters got among them and could not be weeded out. However, not a single word of their work would the jurors say. They either refused to reply to questions or ordered their questioners away.

As they neared the door a photographer set off a flashlight and the effect on the men of the long tension of the last ten hours was shown in the way several of them jumped nervously.

"It's only a flashlight," explained Capt. Tierney.

Presently the jurors began to get away in taxicabs, and presently, too, the Criminal Court Building was deserted, and the janitor turned the key in the lock.

In the Tombs the excitement died down much less slowly, however. There the news flashed from tier to tier, and those prisoners who had gone to sleep were awakened to hear it. Warden Hanley and half a dozen keepers ran from cell to cell ordering the prisoners to return to bed, but there was little sleeping done until daylight shone through the barred windows of the prison.

WAITING FOR THE VERDICT.

Becker Denounces Charge—Jurors Call for Documents.

It was ten hours before the verdict was brought in that Justice Goff had completed the last word of his charge, a charge which defined murder in the first and second degree, but which made no mention of manslaughter and its degrees, a charge which had held the jurors spellbound for nearly three hours, a charge which filled Becker with a silent rage, angered and incensed him, but nevertheless could not break the nerve which enabled him to keep his face expressionless throughout the many minutes that the Justice spoke.

But when the charge was over; when the jury had filed from the room; when Justice Goff had retired to his chambers, and when Becker for several minutes had received the greetings of friends, then the accused Lieutenant spoke. His hands were clenched; his body, drawn erect, was stiffened as though he were setting himself to deliver a blow, and his words came through set teeth. He hissed them out, declaring bitterly:

"It was not a charge to a jury. It was a thinly-veiled summing up of the prosecution's case. That charge was no charge. It was absolutely partial, and in it there was no justice. Justice Goff was simply directing the jury to convict me."

Mrs. Becker, who had hastened to her husband's side echoed his words. She waited, though till she was leaving the court room with a woman friend. Apparently she did not want further to dishearten her husband. But away from him she said:

"I have sat through the whole trial and have listened to all the testimony. The charge of Justice Goff was not fair nor impartial as it should have been. It was very partial, on the contrary, and it was directed pointedly against my husband. It was not a charge. It was a straight summing up for the prosecution. That's all."

Wife Waits With Becker.

The jurors left the courtroom at 2:20 o'clock to go to luncheon in the Murray Hill Hotel. They returned a few moments after 4 o'clock, an dat 4:10 were locked in the juryroom back of the Supreme Court, on the White Street side of the Criminal Court Building.

In the streets about the building were crowds of curious folk, whom Capt. Tierney and Lieut. Brady, with a squad of men from the Elizabeth Street Police Station, kept from entering the Court House. A large part of this crowd gathered in White Street, for through the opaque glass of the four large windows of the juryroom could be seen now and then the silhouetted form of a juror as he walked up and down the room, and occasionally there came the sound of voices in argument. Not a word could be distinguished, however, and there was no hint from the juryroom as to how the jurors stood.

Within the Court House a curious throng gathered in the halls. For a time the police let them stay there, but as darkness fell over the building they drove them out.

Lieut. Becker, when the jury left the courtroom and Justice Goff retired to his chambers, was escorted under guard to the Sheriff's office on the fourth floor of the building, and there he waited with his wife, Mrs. Helen Lynch Becker, for the word of the jury which was to send him perhaps to his home in the Bronx, perhaps to the death chamber in Sing Sing.

Mrs. Becker, cheerful as she had been throughout the trial, talked affectionately with her husband, and did her best to keep his spirits from flagging. It was a terrific strain on the accused man, but he stood it as he had stood the strain from the start of the trial without flinching.

Becker throughout the day had listened to Justice Goff's charge with a tense seriousness and careful attention, which had not marked his manner in any earlier day of the trial. But he had not exhibited even a trace of nervousness. Once he had put his big hand behind his right ear, cupping it there that he might not miss a word that the Justice uttered, but even then, as he admitted later, he felt that the charge was unfair and prejudiced, he gave no sign of distress.

In the Sheriff's room his nerve served him as well. He laughed and joked with his wife, declared his confidence in a speedy acquittal, and chatted comfortably and happily with the friends who dropped in to see him. They included his brothers, Jackson and John; his old commander, ex-Inspector Alexander Williams, and his close friend, William Weil, who had been attorney for Charles B. Plitt, Jr., when Becker's press agent was charged with murder after one of the Lieutenant's raids. There were present also Andrew Morris, another old friend; John and Susie Lynch, brother and sister of Becker's wife; Charles and Louis Plitt, and Louis G. Grant, a lawyer friend of the accused Lieutenant.

Becker's guards seemed eager to grant to him as much comfort and liberty as possible, and they made no effort to curtail these visits of his friends.

Jurors Call for Documents.

Three floors below, meanwhile, the jurors arguing and debating, were still unable to arrive at a verdict. At 4:45 o'clock, a little more than a half hour after beginning their deliberations, they sent Capt. Lynch, head of the court guards, to Justice Goff with the request that Schepps's letter from Hot Springs to Rose, the latter's written confession, and the testimony taken by the commission in Hot Springs be sent to them.

Justice Goff sent word to District Attorney Whitman and John F. McIntyre and John W. Hart, counsel for Becker. They conferred in the Justice's chambers for many minutes, and at last it was decided to send Schepps's letter and Rose's confession to the jury. Mr. Hart said afterward that Mr. McIntyre and he had been willing to send to the jury such parts of the Hot Springs Commission as had been read into the record in open court, but that Mr. Whitman objected, and Justice Goff sustained him. The failure of the commission to reach them caused the jury to send out instantly to discover at whose request it had been kept from them, and Justice Goff returned the word that they might not have this information.

Immunity Agreement Called For.

It was not until 6 o'clock that word came again from the jury room and this time it was the stipulations between the State and Rose, Webber, Vallon and Schepps which were wanted. These were sent to the jurors at once, and for the next six hours no word was heard from them.

Among the crowds of lawyers, newspaper men and court attendants who filled the corridors and waited impatiently outside the court room door, all sorts of speculations on the probable verdict were based on these requests. It was conceded generally that the commission could be wanted only for its relation to Sam Schepps. The little man had had much to say about the case to Postmaster Frederick Johnston, to Hotchkiss, the editor; to Hoagaboom, the bath house man, and to Bergholtz, the man whom Schepps on the witness stand characterized as "a pickpocket of twenty years' standing in New York." It was by the introduction of this testimony that the defense made its strongest effort to picture Schepps, convicted by his own statements to Hot Springs friends, an accomplice in the murder conspiracy.

Assuming this supposition to be true, the conclusion was drawn that Becker had been saved from conviction. The discrediting of Schepps as a corroborative witness to the testimony of the self-confessed accomplices would go far, it was argued, to destroy the State's case against the accused Lieutenant, and were this to be accomplished the worst Becker might expect would be a disagreement of the jury, with a possibility of an acquittal.

Becker was greatly pleased at the delay of the jury and declared that it augured well for him. He had steadfastly put from him any thought that a conviction might result from the jury's deliberations, but he frankly admitted his satisfaction with the delay.

The demand for the stipulations had hardly been satisfied when Justice Goff announced that he was going out to dinner. It was supposed that he intended going to the Astor House, but he eluded all who tried to follow his movements, and several hours later had not returned. On his behalf it was said that he had left his telephone number with his attendant, Thomas Kearney, and had promised to return to court whenever he might be needed to hear the verdict.

Dinner Brought Jurors.

Dinner was brought in for the jurors at 8 o'clock, waiters conveying it from the Murray Hill Hotel in automobiles, and for a half hour or so the jury were busier with their food than they were with their arguments.

Mr. and Mrs. Becker had a light supper together in the Sheriff's room, Becker having a chicken sandwich and a cup of coffee and Mrs. Becker a sandwich and tea.

From the court room, where a crowd of newspaper men and court attendants still waited for the return of the jury, the heat had been shut off, and presently those who were compelled to remain there donned overcoats and hats and sat dejectedly about with their collars turned up. Not a window was open, but the chill that pervaded the room was decidedly uncomfortable.

So the hours passed with the waiting throng in the Criminal Court Building. In the Tombs, too, and far uptown at the Democratic Club of the Twenty-third Assembly District, of which Becker is a member, there were anxiously waiting crowds also.

In the Tombs there was not a prisoner but who waited eagerly to hear the fate of Becker. Charities Commissioner Whitney, who visited the prison and afterward came into the Criminal Court Building, said that Warden Hanley was being pestered to death by requests to learn whether a verdict had been found.

Gunmen Anxious as to Verdict.

In the Tombs are the four gunmen, "Gyp the Blood" Horowitz, "Lefty Louie" Rosenberg, "Whitey" Lewis, and "Dago Frank" Cirofici, as well as William Shapiro and Jack Sullivan, the ex-King of the newsboys, all of whom were jointly indicted with Becker and all of whom can see in the fate meted out to him a prediction of what may be in store for themselves.

Warden Hanley, commenting on the anxiety of these prisoners, suggested that Becker himself would know the verdict scarcely before these men. The Warden declared that the news would travel through the prison by some strange underground means much quicker than it could be sent through by telegraph.

At the Twenty-third Assembly Democratic Club a number of Becker's friends waited until late last night to learn what was in store for Becker. William K. Klugel, an old friend of the Lieutenant, arrived early at the Criminal Court Building and said he was a committee of one sent from the club to notify the other members as soon as a verdict was found. He said the club was keeping open house, every member almost was there, and arrangements had been made for a feast of thanksgiving if Becker were acquitted.

As the night wore on, still without word from the jury room, the crowds in the street increased somewhat and at 10 o'clock there were several hundred persons surrounding the building, while some 200 had found places in the corridors. These 200, however, all had some right to be present, for Capt. Tierney and Lieut. Brady had stationed policemen at every door giving entrance to the building and it required a police card or special pass to get by these watchmen. At the foot of the stairs leading from the ground floor to the first floor, where the Supreme Court is, there were other policemen, and in front of the door leading into the court room and into the Justice's chambers there were other policemen.

GOFF'S CHARGE TO THE JURY.

Held That State's Case Rested on Rose's Story Legally Corroborated.

Justice Goff spoke for more than three hours in charging the jury. His charge laid upon the jury the responsibility of fixing the guilt or innocence of the accused Lieutenant almost entirely on the story of "Billiard Ball" Jack Rose. Justice Goff laid only this added injunction on the jury: that they must find Rose's story corroborated by the evidence, and then, "if you believe this story, you must bring in a verdict of guilty against this defendant."

"Is it within the range of practicability that a man of his mentality," declared Justice Goff, speaking slowly and impressively, and referring to Rose, "could have concocted such a story? Is it possible that he could sit in the witness chair for ten hours and tell that story without having facts in his mind? If he did concoct that story, why was he doing it? If he did not concoct it, was the story true? His relations with the defendant have not been denied, and consequently it becomes of the greatest importance whether the testimony of Jack Rose is entitled to credence or not."

But Justice Goff painted the other side of the picture also. He laid stress on that portion of his charge which instructed the jury that were they to find Rose's story unworthy of credence then they must acquit Becker. He called attention to the environment in which Rose had passed his life and suggested that this must be taken into consideration in passing upon the gambler's truthfulness. And he dropped the subject with the solemn warning to the jury that heavy as was the burden thus put upon its members, they alone must be the judge of the facts; they alone must say whether Rose had lied or had spoken the truth.

The Justice dwelt on the matter of corroboration, explaining carefully the law which requires that the testimony of an accomplice be corroborated by the testimony of some person not an accomplice and by testimony which tended to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. He conceded that the testimony of "Bridgey" Webber and of Harry Vallon was not such testimony since all must admit that these men were accomplices. Of the status of Sam Schepps, the man upon whom District Attorney Whitman had leaned heavily in his effort to corroborate Rose's story, Justice Goff declined to make a ruling. That the jurors must do for themselves, he declared.

98 Witnesses Heard.

Justice Goff began to speak at 10:37 o'clock, two minutes after he had ascended the bench. At first his voice was so low in tone that it carried scarcely to the jury box. As he proceeded, however, he seemed to gain strength, and as he neared his peroration his voice swept to the furthermost limits of the courtroom, clear, calm, and decisive.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he began, "we have reached a point in this case where it becomes my duty to deliver it into your hands for final judgment. Your function in this courtroom is about to be exercised, and you must deliver a true and impartial verdict. The trial has been exacting in that it has taxed your attention heavily. It must have exercised your highest faculties and attention.

"Up to last Tuesday afternoon, when the last piece of testimony had been given, you had listened to ninety-eight witnesses. When we adjourned on that day 2,745 pages of the record had been covered with testimony. It is beyond the power of human memory to retain a clear and accurate recollection of all that testimony, and therefore, in the course of my address, I shall go over it for your benefit.

"Under our system of Government any man indicted for an offense is entitled to a trial before a Judge and jury of his peers. The defendant has had that trial, but, in addition, the law lays down certain precepts for the guidance of the prosecution and for the safeguarding of the rights of the defendant. Of these I shall speak to you.

"Under the law a presumption of innocence remains with the defendant throughout the case until he be proved guilty. The defendant is not called upon to prove his innocence. It is for the prosecution to prove his guilt. The burden of this proof lies with the State.

"When all the evidence is in, if there be any reasonable doubt, it must be given to the defendant. You jurors are the exclusive judges of the evidence. The Judge is the one who rules on all points of law, and you must abide by his ruling.

"The argumets of counsel not supported by evidence should not be given any weight. Arguments of counsel not supported by law should be disregarded and must be excluded.

"Statements and answers of witnesses made when objection by counsel have had them stricken out must not be considered. Any thing of that nature must be disregarded. The credibility of witnesses must be judged entirely and solely by you.. The testimony of each witness must be impartially considered and tested by your judgment. It is for you to judge how far the testimony of each witness affects this case. That is a matter solely for your judgment.

"You may discard or reject any part, or give credit to any part, in judging testimony. You must take into consideration the manner and conduct of any witness. His relations, friendly or hostile, to the prosecution or to the defense you must also consider.

Defense Waives Definitions.

"The defendant was at liberty to take the stand in his own defense, but the fact that he did not elect to do so must not be construed by you as testimony either of his guilt or of his innocence now that the time has come when the determination of this guilt or innocence is to be placed in your hands.

"The charge against this defendant is murder in the first degree, and it is the requirement of the law that I should read to you from the statutes the definition of murder in the first degree.

"The killing of a human being by another is homicide, and homicide is either murder or manslaughter. Murder is divided into two degrees, the first and second, and manslaughter is divided similarly into two grades, the first and second."

Justice Goff stopped a moment, turned to a legal tome, and presently read distinctly the legal definitions of murder in the first and second degrees. As he concluded he hesitated once again, and then, looking at the counsel table where sat besides Mr. McIntyre, John W. Hart, Lloyd Stryker, and George W. Whiteside, he finally said:

"Unless counsel for the defense requests me to read the definitions of the two degrees of manslaughter, I shall not read them."

There was a pause of several seconds in which the courtroom was as still as a church, the audience awaiting Mr. McIntyre's reply. For an instant it seemed as though the lawyer had not realized that he was addressed. At last, though, he rose slowly, and in tones as impressive as those of Justice Goff pronounced the determination of the defense:

"We do not make such a request."

Justice Goff bowed slightly as the lawyer inclined his head toward the bench, and after a short pause resumed his discussion of the degrees of murder.

"The first degree of murder states that a crime must be planned deliberately and with premeditation," he continued. "The second grade states that the crime must have been designed but without premeditation. Therefore, we come to the point where we have to consider all the facts and circumstances surrounding the crime. We have to decide whether there was deliberation and premeditation.

"From the evidence, the defendant in the latter part of June expressed a desire to have Rosenthal killed, and on several occasions reiterated that desire to kill. The killing took place on the morning of July 16, and from the first utterance to the killing on the 16th, there was sufficient time for the jurors to draw an inference that the defendant did express a wish for the death of Rosenthal and did so order that he be killed. In order to simplify that question, I will read to you from decisions of the Court of Appeals to show you what constitutes premeditation."

Justice Goff then read from the case of the People vs. Conroy, in reference to the questions of deliberation and premeditation. He then quoted from the case of the People vs. Malone, and added:

"Now, gentlemen, these extracts will show you, I am sure, that if you believe the testimony, premeditation has been clearly shown. If the evidence shows that there was time to consider the crime,

The New York Times:

In your issue of Oct. 16th I placed a Lost advertisement for a lady's gold watch, lost on the afternoon or evening of the 14th inst. On Oct. 17th at 6:30 o'clock in the evening I was called to the telephone and informed that the watch had been found and could be secured by proper identification. The identification was satisfactory to the finder, and the watch is now in the possession of the owner. The finder saw the advertisement in The New York Times. The advertisement also appeared in two other newspapers. This speaks well for The Times as an advertising medium. (Signed) D. B. INMAN, then it shows also that there was time for premeditation, for the law assumes that if sufficient time has elapsed to allow for a reconsideration of the determination to commit murder and this reconsideration has not taken place, then there has been premeditation."

JURY FINDS BECKER GUILTY OF MURDER

As Justice Goff spoke Becker leaned eagerly forward in his chair, one big hand cupped behind his right ear that he might not lose a word of the softly crooning voice of the Justice. His counsel all leaned forward with equal attention, for Justice Goff's words were hard to hear.

"It is not necessary that I should comment on the degree of murder," went on Justice Goff. "If it be shown that there were the elements of deliberation and premeditation in this murder. The case of the State rests on three premises:

"First, that Becker conceived and ordered Rosenthal's murder.

"Second, that Rose transmitted to the gunmen orders received from Becker; and,

"Third, that the gunmen shot Rosenthal in fulfillment of these orders.

"If it be true that Becker gave these orders, then I instruct you that in the eyes of the law Becker made Rose his agent, and that what Rose did Becker did. If the proof satisfies you that Becker instructed Rose, then it matters not by whose hand Rosenthal was slain, if only the murder was done in pursuance of these orders. It matters not whether the actors in the tragedy were selected by Becker, or whether he even knew any of them."

"In view of the great length of this trial and the tremendous amount of testimony, I will relate to you a skeleton of the evidence, that evidence on which the State bases its case, the story of Jack Rose. I shall give you this skeleton without comment, interjecting only, now and then, a few matters that came to light later in the trial. I do this that you may have a clear view of the testimony which has been placed before you by the various witnesses."

Starting then with the forming of Becker's and Rosenthal's acquaintance at the Elks Club on Thanksgiving night of last year, he carried the story along to the meeting in the same club on New Year's Eve, when Becker put his arms about Rosenthal, and assured him of his regard. The Justice went on:

Becker's Deal With Rosenthal.

"Becker said to Rosenthal on that occasion not to worry, that he would take care of him. Later Rose came to Becker and said that Rosenthal wanted to open a gambling house, but didn't have the money. Becker, it is alleged, advanced the money. The gambling house was opened.

"On March 26, 1912, the Commissioner of Police gave Becker an anonymous letter complaining that Rosenthal's house was running under the 'protection of Jack Rose, Becker's collector.' Two days later Becker reported that Rose was his 'collector of information.' Two days later Becker received a letter from the Commissioner, purporting to have come from the Mayor, ordering an investigation.

"About that date Becker demanded $500 from Rosenthal for the defense of Plitt. Rosenthal refused to pay, and Becker said he was going to raid the place. Becker asked Rosenthal to stand for a fake raid, and Rosenthal refused. Margolies, a newspaper tipster, as he described himself, said Becker described the interior of the Rosenthal house to Officers Shephard, White, and Steinert at Police Headquarters, and told them to get warrants for the fake raid.

"Later at the Union Square Hotel Becker told Rose that he had to make the raid—that Steinert and White had got the evidence against Rosenthal's place. Later Becker told Rose that the raid would be made on April 17. The raid was made on that afternoon and two prisoners were taken—one of them a relative of Mrs. Rosenthal.

"After the raid was made Rosenthal went to Becker and complained about it. Becker told Rosenthal not to worry, that the case would be fixed in the police court; that Steinert and White would not be able to identify their prisoners as the men against whom the warrants were issued on their affidavits.

Order to "Croak" Rosenthal.

"Later Becker and Rose met in the Union Square Hotel. Waiters served Becker and Rose in the Union Square Hotel, where they spoke in whispers. Twice a waiter saw Rose pass money to Becker.

"On April 18 Becker reported to the Police Commissioner that he had raided the place. Later, at Rose's home, Becker told Rose Rosenthal wanted to know what was to be done. Then the satisfaction piece to the chattel mortgage was entered. Then Becker told Rose that Rosenthal was trying to get newspapers to denounce him (Becker.) Then The World received the Rosenthal affidavit and Becker went to The World to get the affidavit to be used in a prosecution for criminal libel.

"Still later, Becker told Rose that Rosenthal had seen Magistrate McAdoo, Commissioner Waldo, and Mayor Gaynor, and was then trying to see the District Attorney, and that, Becker said, 'means danger to us all.'

"Becker said then, 'Rosenthal means to do me and we must stop him.' Becker asked Rose to see Zelig. Becker said, "There is only one thing to do to stop Rosenthal so that he won't do anything to bother any of us again, and that is to stop him for all time.'

"Becker said that Rosenthal was slandering his family. Becker said there was no danger, as he (Becker) would take care of him. He told Rose to tell Zelig to give orders to his gang to croak Rosenthal. That night Becker gave Rose money to give to Zelig.

"Between June 10 and 22 Rose saw 'Lefty Louie' and 'Whitey' Lewis and said Becker wanted them to kill Rosenthal. They offered to do it that night. Rose told them to wait. Later Becker came to Rose and complained several times about the delay.

Webber Put in Charge of Murder Gang.

"In the latter part of June Becker, Rose, Webber, and Vallon met at 144th Street and Seventh Avenue and there Becker asked Webber to take charge of the murder. This conversation was corroborated by Webber and Vallon. Later 'Lefty Louie' told Rose Webber had approached him. Then Luban heard Becker, in the Lafayette Baths, say if Rosenthal was not 'croaked' he would 'croak' him himself.

"Then Webber sent the gunmen to the Garden Restaurant to murder Rosenthal, but Rose, on the stand, swore he lied and told the gunmen a Burns detective was there. Thus, the witness Rose swore, the murder was forestalled for a time.

"On Saturday, July 13, Webber, Rose, and Vallon met and Rose told Becker they had discussed the murder of Rosenthal. On the night of July 13 Rose telephoned to Becker and Becker said to Rose: 'Why don't you get on the job and do something?'

"Late on Saturday, July 13, Becker and his attorney called on Isaac White in The New York World's legal department and asked for the Rosenthal affidavit, to be used for a criminal libel prosecution against Rosenthal."

Justice Goff reviewed the Rosenthal affidavit, told how a telegram from Newport had been shown to Becker telling of the District Attorney's intention to go to the bottom of the charges, and then went on:

"On Sunday, July 14, Rose, Schepps, Webber, and Vallon went on the Sam Paul outing, and that night Becker telephoned to Rose and asked if there wasn't some way to croak Rosenthal before he testified to the Grand Jury."

The Murder and What Followed.

Justice Goff reviewed the testimony about the visit Rose made to Dora Gilbert to get an affidavit against Rosenthal. Then he read Rose's statement to Becker about the issuing of Grand Jury subpoenas for the investigation of the Rosenthal charges against Becker. Then the Court came to the activities of "Bridgie" Webber in plotting the assassination.

"Webber went to see the four men and told them not to corroborate Rosenthal. That same day Rose went to help get the Dora Gilbert affidavit. On the way back the tire exploded and Shapiro's car was secured. They went uptown and got "Dago" Frank, returning to Webber's poker room, where Rose, Webber, Schepps, and Vallon were gathered with the four gunmen.

"Webber went out and found Rosenthal at the Metropole. The gunmen rushed there in Shapiro's car. As Rosenthal emerged, a man raised his hand as a signal. Shots were fired and Rosenthal fell dead. The gunmen fled. At 3 o'clock Rose telephoned Becker, who congratulated him on the murder.

"At 3:30 o'clock Becker went to the Forty-seventh Street Station and saw the body of Rosenthal, and District Attorney Whitman. At daybreak Becker met Rose, Webber, Vallon, and 'Jack' Sullivan at Forty-second Street and Sixth Avenue and said to them: 'If it had not been for the presence of District Attorney Whitman I would have cut out his tongue, and hung it up as a warning to other squealers.' He also said: 'When I started uptown to-night from the fights I told Otto, my chauffeur, that if I saw Rosenthal I was going to take a shot at him, and that I wanted Otto to put on speed and not stop.'

"Later, on July 16, Webber gave Rose $1,000. He said he gave the money on request of Becker. Later in the afternoon of July 16 Rose went to Harry Pollok's flat. Later that day Becker telephoned to Rose, and told him he was sending a lawyer to him to get an affidavit to show that he (Becker) had had nothing to do with the Rosenthal mortgage. He also wanted an affidavit from Pollok that Pollok had given Rose the $1,500 to lend to Rosenthal for his gambling house.

"The State has in part corroborated its testimony by the following: A servant at Rose's house swore Becker often went to Rose's house. So did Margaret Rose, a nurse. Mrs. Rosenthal swore she was present at the raid, and that Becker told her he would cancel the mortgage. The mortgage was canceled eight days after the raid. Witnesses have told you of the raid. Mrs. Louis Rosenberg, wife of 'Lefty Louie,' testified Rose did visit her husband, as he had sworn. Schepps said he saw Becker at the Harlem conference. He testified he got the auto for Rose. Shapiro testified he drove to the home of 'Dago' Frank for him the night of the murder. Witnesses have sworn for the State that the four gunmen were friends and lived together, disappearing immediately after the murder.

"Walter Krause and Stanisch testified that these four gunmen whom Rose said he hired were the four men who killed Herman Rosenthal in front of the Hotel Metropole."

The Justice ran rapidly over the testimony of Frederick Hawley, the reporter, and told of the testimony of Harry Pollok and of the visit to his home of John W. Hart, and when he had retold the whole case he exclaimed:

"Now, gentlemen, the foregoing narrative is simply to refresh your recollection of the testimony. Exclude from it anything which you do not recall to have been in evidence. It is not contended that Becker fired a revolver. It is charged only that he instructed others to do that killing.

"As I have instructed you before, if that be so, then Becker must be held responsible for the acts of his agents. It is charged that while he did not commit the murder he inspired the killing nevertheless."

Justice Goff read from Section 29 of the Penal Code that "a person concerned in the commission of a crime, whether he commits the crime or aids and abets or directly or indirectly procures another to commit such a crime, is a principal thereto." To the reading of this section the Justice cautioned the jury to give especial heed, as it was the crux of the whole situation.

"The situation," said the Justice, "is that in which one man inspires in the mind of another man the idea to commit a crime. In the old common law such a man was known as an accessory before the fact, and it may surprise some of you to learn that there is no longer in this State such a designation. Every person engaged in the commission of a crime is now a principal. The absence of Becker from the scene makes no difference if he aided and abetted in the commission of the crime or if he instigated and inspired it. I am sure that it does not require any further explanation from me. Becker stands indicted for the crime of murder in that he did commission, advise, and inspire the killing of Herman Rosenthal."

And here Justice Goff began his reference to Sam Schepps which ended by his leaving the decision of Schepps's status in the case in the hands of the jury.

"It is apparent on this testimony I have recited," he continued, "that the chief witnesses against Becker are what are called accomplices. There is no question about Rose being an accomplice, nor is there any question of Webber and Vallon being accomplices. I charge you that Rose, Webber and Vallon are accomplices on their own confessions.

"About Schepps I am in doubt, and therefore I must decline to charge you as a matter of law that he is an accomplice. You must use your own discretion in deciding this matter, and it is one which I feel I may safely leave to you. The decision must rest with you as to how far Schepps was implicated in the murder.

"If I recollect aright there is no direct evidence that Schepps, before the murder, had knowledge that the crime was to be committed, or that he took part in the plans of the conspirators. His relations with the men known to be concerned in this conspiracy may have generated suspicion, but suspicion is not knowledge. He may have had suspicions after Webber's departure from his poker room and after the departure of the gunmen, but suspicion is not knowledge and, legally, I cannot charge that he was an accomplice.

"Webber has testified that Schepps was not an accomplice, and since there is no direct testimony to warrent me deciding whether or not Schepps was an accomplice, I must leave that decision to you.

"But there is no question that after the murder Schepps had equal knowledge of the crime with the others. He knew the men concerned in it, and he was present at the payment of the money. He had a guilty knowledge, but that does not make him an accomplice in the eyes of the law and so I cannot thus charge. You must decide the question for yourselves."

Justice Goff, on the subject of accomplices, took occasion to instruct the jury on the law of the testimony of accomplices, and he went on, saying:

"Schepps's testimony must be considered by you to determine whether or not he was an accomplice, for the testimony of an accomplice cannot be taken to corroborate that of another accomplice, and I want especially to call that to your attention.

"A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice unless corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the crime. It is unnecessary for me to explain the meaning of the word 'tends.' The application of that rule of law must depend upon your judgment. Is there real evidence to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime? If there is, it is for you to say whether such evidence is sufficient.

Must Weigh Evidence of Accomplices.

"Formerly testimony of an accomplice was accepted in the courts as sufficient to secure a conviction. But a more liberal and humane custom arose not to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Then, on the advice of Judges, this custom became a law, but it was left wholly in the discretion of a jury to decide who are and who are not accomplices and to decide whether the testimony of an accomplice has been corroborated by the witnesses.

"It would be impossible to outline the most important features of evidence. Every case must rest upon its own total of evidence. It is for the jury to say how far the testimony of the admitted accomplices has been corroborated.

"On the testimony of the accomplices; the law permits such testimony. It does not say such testimony may not be received. On the other hand, it says accomplices' testimony must be received and that you must accept it for what you believe it to be worth.

"The law recognizes that in many cases the exigencies of the occasion demand that testimony of accomplices should be taken.

"There is no inhibition on you of accepting the testimony of Rose or Webber or Schepps, for the law recognizes the value of that evidence. The law recognizes the exigencies that made it absolutely necessary to use such evidence in order that the ends of justice may be served. The law cannot exclude such evidence, and this jury must weigh it for what it is worth."

Then Justice Goff got to Jack Rose, and, speaking slowly and impressively, he said:

The Credibility of Rose's Story.

"Speaking of the testimony of Jack Rose, the first and most important witness for the prosecution, his testimony should be taken as if one continuous session. You should have the whole narrative as of one story. If Rose's story was manufactured, it should be so considered; but, on the other hand, if it was true, then during his ten hours in the witness chair, three for examination and seven for cross-examination, you should give it that consideration.

"Gentlemen, you have to pass upon the credibility of that man's testimony. For the guilt or innocence of the defendant depends to a great extent upon it.

"What constitutes credibility? It is the credence you give the testimony. You may speak in general of the appearance and manner of the witness on the stand. His hesitancy or ability in answering questions all constitute elements to be considered when weighing the evidence. Your everyday experiences in life will direct you in this. The impressions you form of a man from a thousand and one circumstances give you a knowledge of the man. In your work as jurors you can form an impression of the credibility of a witness from the manner in which he conducts himself.

"In taking up Rose, you have a right to take in his former life, situation, and surroundings. The frankness of the suppression of testimony, his ability to withstand the severe cross-examination, and the whole situation in which he appeared should be taken into consideration. You have a right to consider if he manufactured this or not and if he concocted that story.

"Is it within the range of practicability that a man of his mentality could concoct such a story? Is it possible that he could sit in the witness chair for ten hours and tell that story without having the facts in his mind? If he did concoct the story, why was he doing it? If he was not concocting it, was the story true? His relations with the defendant have not been denied. It becomes of great importance for you to say whether the testimony of Jack Rose is entitled to credence or not.

"As I before instructed you, it is within your power to refuse or accept his testimony. If it impressed you as truthful, or, if, on the other hand, it impressed you as untruthful, consider it accordingly. If it does not impress you as truthful, you must hold it untruthful, and you must acquit.

"In view of the environments of this man; in view of all the circumstances, it is for you and your minds to decide on the truth of this man's testimony. You are the supreme power in judging his testimony, and you are the ones to give the last, the final words."

Justice Goff turned next to the contention of the defense that Becker himself was the victim of a conspiracy and that Rose and Webber really murdered Rosenthal because of their own hatred for him and not because of Becker's instructions, afterward inventing these instructions to free themselves from blame.

"In considering this," went on the Justice, "I instruct you that even if Rose and Webber hated Rosenthal enough to kill him, that would not excuse Becker if he took advantage of their hostility to have Rosenthal killed because of his own hatred and fear. If a combination or conspiracy for murder exists and a stranger enters it for his own purposes, he becomes a principal."

Justice Goff touched then on motive, saying that, where there was direct evidence of murder, motive need not be shown. He rehearsed the prosecution's charge of motive, however, and, in closing his main charge, read the law on circumstantial evidence, which he said was frequently misunderstood.

Charges for the Defense.

And then Justice Goff announced that counsel for the defense had handed to him requests for 144 charges to the jury. He explained that because of the great length of the document he would read only those requests upon which he had determined to grant the defense's request to charge. He skipped the first sixteen requests, charging, however, that statements made in the trial by counsel be disregarded and then, passing over many more, charged that the burden of proof was never shifted from the prosecution at any stage of the trial. Next he charged that a specific intent on the part of Becker to kill Rosenthal must be shown, and also, that if the evidence in the case could be reconciled with any reasonable hypothesis of innocence, Becker must be acquitted.

Most important of the charges which the defense requested and the Justice granted were those that in considering the testimony of Vallon and Schepps the jury must consider their motives, and that corroborative evidence of immaterial matters, even though it raise a grave suspicion as to Becker's implication in the crime, was not sufficient evidence to convict him.

Justice Goff also consented to charge on the fine psychological point that:

> Should you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant Becker counseled, advised, or directed the killing of Herman Rosenthal, and that the persons to whom he gave such counsel, advice, or direction procured the killing of the said Herman Rosenthal on July 16, 1912, you, nevertheless, should not find a verdict of guilty against the defendant Becker if you have a reasonable doubt as to whether the persons who directly procured or committed the alleged murder acted under such instructions.

In other words, the defense contended that Rose and Webber, though receiving instructions from Becker to procure Rosenthal's murder, nevertheless might have ordered the murder for their own purposes and without thought of Becker's instructions.

But Justice Goff refused to charge that Schepps was an accomplice when the defense made a specific demand for this, and he refused, too, to make several other charges which the defense contended were of the utmost importance. He refused to charge that in considering the testimony of Vallon, the convict, the jury consider his admission of conviction for other crimes. He refused to charge the jury that they must give no thought to the effect of their verdict on any one but Becker. The defense contends that the jurors may have an idea that the acquittal of Becker might mean the falling down of all the cases against the gunmen and so be influenced not to acquit.

It took Justice Goff only a very few minutes to run through the requests, and out of the 144 he granted 27, modified 4, and denied 113.

Mr. McIntyre consumed many minutes in reading exceptions into the record, and then Justice Goff, concluding his charge, said:

"There is one more thing and I am done. I have instructed you as to the rights of the defendant, and they must be observed. This defendant is on trial for murder, and not for anything else. Whatever you find your duty to be, you must discharge it. If you believe he is innocent your duty is to acquit him. If you believe he is guilty it is your duty to so find.

"I charge you as sworn men to do your duty, and do it as you feel it should be done."

It was then 2:20 o'clock, and at Justice Goff's command the jury was taken to the Murray Hill Hotel for luncheon. They returned at 4:10 o'clock, and then began their deliberations.

"VERDICT JUST"—WHITMAN.

To Try the Gunmen Next—Pleased That Goff Will Preside.

"The verdict of the jury is a just one," was the comment made by District Attorney Whitman. "It speaks for itself."

Mr. Whitman said he had agreed with his assistants, Mr. Moss and Mr. Rubin, to refrain from a detailed discussion of the case. He was asked if the trials of the four gunmen would proceed at once, and in response he explained that as each had asked for a separate trial, and that had been granted, the final disposal of all four cases could not be predicted for a very early date.

All possible expedition, however, he did promise, and he closed the interview with the statement that the trial of Davidson, the slayer of "Big Jack" Zelig, would start on Wednesday. All these trials, Mr. Whitman said with much satisfaction, would be presided over by Justice Goff.

DOUGHERTY IS SILENT

But Draws a Long Breath When Told of Becker's Conviction.

Second Deputy Police Commissioner George S. Dougherty, at his home in Sheepshead Bay, got his first news of the Becker verdict from THE TIMES, which telephoned his house shortly after word of the verdict was received from the Criminal Court Building. He drew a long breath, audible over the telephone, and asked:

"So they found him guilty, did they?"

Commissioner Dougherty declined to discuss the verdict in any way. He said he had decided not to talk about the case, and refused even to discuss his own part in investigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal. When asked if he did not regard it as a remarkable commentary on police conditions in New York that a policeman should be found guilty of the crime of murder, he responded:

"Nothing to say."

JUST AS SCHEPPS EXPECTED.

State's Witness, However, Did Not Look for Verdict so Soon.

The first news of the conviction of Lieut. Becker of murder in the first degree was taken to the West Side Prison by a TIMES reporter five minutes after the foreman of the jury had pronounced the word "Guilty" before Judge Goff in the Criminal Court Building. The tidings created consternation in the Warden's office, where it was evident that Rose, Webber, Vallon, and Schepps were not too popular with their keepers.

"There must be some mistake," ejaculated one of the blue uniformed officials. "Are you certain? When did the jury come in with its verdict?"

When assured that the report was authentic he shook his head dubiously at the reporter's request for an interview with the State's witnesses quartered under his charge.

"It is against the rules to admit any visitor to the prison at this hour," he explained, "but if they care to come down here to talk to you I will strain a point under the circumstances."

A messenger returned after a few minutes with the news that Webber, Rose, and Vallon were asleep in their cells, and that the only one of the quartet who responded to his call was the dapper Schepps.

"Sam says he does not want to come down here. He is undressed." added the keeper, "but he would like a note from you confirming what I have told him."

The reporter thereupon wrote a brief missive relating the fact that Becker had been found guilty, and asking for some comment from Schepps and his companions. After a delay of ten minutes the following note was sent down from Schepps:

"Dear Sir—Your note received. All the boys are asleep, and as Mr. Whitman has not yet lifted his order on our making a statement, I am sorry, but I must refuse. Respectfully, "SCHEPPS."

"Was Sam much surprised by the news?" asked the reporter.

"He seemed surprised that a verdict had been reached to-night," was the reply. "When he was first told of the verdict he was suspicious. He says he expected it and that Mr. Whitman is a smart man."

1,800 fine shirts, superior in make, fabric, design and finish, and remarkably low in price

¶ We have been running a dependable shirt shop for ten years, and we know the ins and outs of the shirt business. Yet in all of these ten years we have never offered any better shirt values than those in this sale, and, in fact, it is seldom we are able to drive so tight a bargain with our sources of supply as in this particular instance. But the maker ran foul of a cancellation on these 1,800 shirts, and we, who are but human in our dealings, consented to take them off his hands only on terms most advantageous to ourselves and you.

¶ The quality of these shirts is worthy of honorable mention. Something more than the mere assembling of fabrics has entered into the making. They are cut, tailored, finished and sized in a manner more deserving of a duplicate order than a cancellation. The fabrics are fine imported Madras and durable piques, in designs that are distinctive and exclusive. There are plain and pleated bosoms, with starched cuffs, and soft negligee effects, with double French cuffs. Neckbands 14 to 20, and all sleeve lengths from 33 to 38 inches—but it will take a long arm to duplicate these values when they are gone. Today's the day.

An Overcoat Which is a Document in Evidence

IT is a blue chinchilla overcoat. It has a belt in the back, and it has buttons.

This much may be said of a number of blue chinchilla overcoats, ready-to-wear, now before the New York public.

But the origin of many of the others is wrapt in mystery or submerged in the "designing room" of an inland manufacturer.

This particular coat is the result of our first having one of New York's best tailors make us a blue chinchilla overcoat with a frock coat front, presenting his latest ideas.

He charged us $125—his regular price.

Then we duplicated the blue chinchilla.

We duplicated the black satin lining exactly.

We duplicated the trimmings, down to the last button.

And we duplicated the model and imitated the quality of tailoring.

The two coats are identical in appearance, in every respect.

We ask $55 for this coat.

Another coat, on the same model, in cheaper material, at $35.

* * *

We do not claim either of these coats are as good as the one that cost $125. But if you cannot afford the $125 coat, these are positively the nearest approach to it you can find.

Suits $20 to $40; overcoats, $25 to $60.

MAY OUST BIG LINERS FROM HUDSON RIVER

FAVOR HOBOKEN PERMITS

But Insist That Privilege Should Have Shortest Time Limit—Stimson to Decide Question.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—While the army engineers in a report filed in Washington to-day are willing that the North German Lloyd, Hamburg-American, and Holland-American Lines shall have the privilege of extending their Hoboken piers into the North River to a length of 1,000 feet, similar to the extension permitted eighteen months ago to the International Mercantile Marine Company on the New York side, they insist that this privilege shall have the briefest possible life. They hold that the North River channel should be narrowed only for the time necessary to provide accommodations elsewhere, and that there shall be no further delay in making the arrangements either on the part of the steamship managements or city authorities involved.

Secretary of War Stimson, who will pass on the matter on his return to Washington next week, will be asked to give definite notice that, in the case of the White Star Line, its present cribwork, designed to protect the Olympic, must be removed when its permit expires next Summer, unless at that time actual work of construction on a pier to accommodate its ships without encroachment on the channel is under way. The same policy will be followed with the German lines, if the engineers have their way.

With the available channel now reduced to about half a mile, they point out, the blocking of the channel becomes a very serious menace to commerce. They agree, however, to the temporary expedient of extending the piers on the principle that, as the practice is gradually allowed to increase there will be less delay in making permanent and ample provision, either at Montauk Point or some other available docking ground, for the constantly increasing number of large steamships.

In recommending permits for the German and Dutch lines, the army engineers are following the precedent made by Secretary of War Dickinson in 1910, when he permitted the extension of the International Mercantile Marine Company, by which piers of the White Star Line were extended in order that the lost Titanic and the Olympic, might dock. They make the recommendation in a voluminous report on the subject of the harbor lines of New York and the danger to commerce from narrowing the channel of the Hudson River, which was received at the office of the army engineers today from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, headed by Col. Black. The contents of the report were not made public and are yet to be perused by Secretary Stimson, and must have his approval before action can be taken.

The whole matter is regarded as a temporary expedient to accommodate the growing transatlantic steamships. The right of the Government to order an immediate removal of any extension is expressly recommended. The report, it is said, is longer than any on the same subject that has preceded it. The argument against restricting the river channel is gone over in detail, as the request involves encroachments upon the channel at a point where it is much narrower than opposite the White Star pier.

Statistics are given showing how tremendously traffic is increasing from year to year. The urgent necessity of provision for the great ocean steamships at some other point is set forth in detail. Various plans for accommodating these big steamships are discussed, among them the idea of buying ground at the inner end of the docks and excavating. This, however, does not do away with the serious inconvenience to traffic, when a large steamship backs out into midsteam to turn and head for the sea.

It is expected that the strongest possible pressure will be brought to bear to obtain an extension of this permit, but the army Engineers will resist this unless it is shown that the steamship companies are actually building new piers at some point in the river or bay, where their length will not interfere with navigation, and need a reasonable time after the close of the present fiscal year to complete the work.

Meanwhile the Inter-State Commission, composed of representatives of New York and New Jersey and of the municipality of New York, which for eighteen months has been working on the problem of rearranging the harbor lines, so as to provide for the long piers required by the increasing length of ocean liners without injuring the facilities of the port, has reached a partial conclusion. This has been made known to the engineers. It is not known here to what extent the Inter-State Commission has met the great problems involved.

Announcement was made last night by Albert Ballin, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Hamburg-American Line, at the Hotel Plaza, that a new service between Boston and Hamburg, via Plymouth and Cherbourg, would be commenced on May 1, 1913, by the two 17,000-ton liners Cleveland and Cincinnati. These vessels have a speed of 16 knots and are engaged now in the New York trade.

Mr. Ballin said also that the liners Amerika, 22,000 tons, and Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, 25,000 tons, would enter the Boston-Hamburg service on May 1, 1914, as it was expected that by that time the second vessel of the Imperator class, 950 feet long and 55,000 tons, would be ready for service between this port and Hamburg.

For the past three months it has been rumored that the Hamburg-American Line would start service to Boston in opposition to the Cunard and White Star companies. The immigration traffic has gradually been diverging from New York to other ports, and Boston has been receiving the larger share, especially the Canadian traffic, in the Winter months. The cabin travel from Boston has also increased.

VERDICT AGAINST GIBSON.

Mrs. Szabo Strangled to Death, Jersey City Coroner's Jury Finds.

The Jersey City Coroner's jury conducting the inquest into the death of Mrs. Rosa M. Szabo, brought in its verdict last night. It found that the woman met death from strangulation, and that Burton W. Gibson was responsible for her death.

After an hour's deliberation the jury brought in its verdict, ending the case as far as the State of New Jersey is concerned.

REMOVE BULLET FROM LUNG.

Three internes in the Williamsburg Hospital, Bedford Avenue and South Third Street, Williamsburg, removed a bullet yesterday from the lung of Nicholas Caponia, 26 years old, of 72 Greenpoint Avenue, who was shot a few days ago in a quarrel with another Italian.

An X-ray picture showed the bullet imbedded in the tissue of the right lung. Cocaine was administered and Dr. Strahl, assisted by Drs. Eberle and Lubrecht, removed the bullet. The operation took a few seconds less than fifteen minutes.

LOTI BACK IN PARIS.

Kept Absolutely to Himself on the Voyage Across the Atlantic.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—Pierre Loti arrived here from Havre to-day on his return from New York. The author had nothing to say, and stated as much in the politest terms to a couple of American newspaper men who met him.

It is evident that M. Loti has resolved to reassume his solitary, exclusive life, now that he is again on French soil. According to fellow-travelers on La Provence, he kept entirely to himself all the way to Havre, his valet being his only companion. Two passengers who attempted to approach him during one of his promenades on deck met with such a frigidly polite reception that others were discouraged, and he was left alone.

This morning M. Loti was up before sunrise, watching intently for the first sign of French land from the boat deck. He remained there, perfectly still, a couple of hours, quite unconscious of the other passengers, as if absorbed in a dream.

DOMINICAN REVOLT GROWS.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—The revolution in San Domingo is gaining headway on the northern side of the island. Meagre advices received at the State Department from Brig. Gen. McIntyre and W. T. S. Doyle, Special Commissioners of the United States, who have been in the Dominican republic for a month and a half for the purpose of quieting the disorder and reopening Custom Houses seized by rebels, indicate that the rebels have become bolder and seized several towns in defiance of the Government.

The United States Commissioners are on the transport Prairie, which sailed from the Mare Island Navy Yard, near San Francisco, on Sept. 24 for Santo Domingo City with 750 marines. Last night the Prairie started on her second trip to the north coast of the island.

After the refusal of the rebel leader to yield the town of Samana, according to the official advices received here, a Government gunboat fired several shots at the place, causing great consternation and some damage to buildings. The rebels were not driven out of their strongholds, however.

Reports that the Commissioners have found the finances of San Domingo in a disordered condition were denied at the State Department. The tendency to graft, it was said, had been held in check since United States officials had been responsible for the collection of revenues.

THE TIMES'S WIRELESS DISPATCHES

GEN. DIAZ ON TRIAL; HIS DEATH PREDICTED

Belief in Mexico City That Rebel Leader Will Be Shot at Sunrise To-day.

SAY MADERO LAID A TRAP

Let Him Believe Troops Would Support Him but Had Him Surrounded by Loyalists.

"Gen. Joaquin Beltran is presiding tonight at Vera Cruz over a summary court-martial board which is trying Gen. Felix Diaz on a charge of treason. The court-martial was ordered by President Madero this afternoon, with instructions that its findings be immediately carried out. This means that Diaz will be shot at sunrise, for it is certain that he will be convicted.

"It was learned to-day that the Diaz revolt was actually a Madero trap set and sprung by the President himself. Diaz had long been suspected of intriguing against the Government. The better to catch him at his own game, Madero permitted him apparently to go about Vera Cruz without seemingly being watched, though, as a matter of fact, administration service men were his constant advisers. Diaz was led to believe that the major part of the army would join his colors the minute he hoisted the standard of rebellion. He failed to see the plot until too late.

"Even when Gen. Beltran's troops appeared before Vera Cruz, Gen. Diaz believed the soldiers had entered the city to join his forces, and would attack those who remained loyal the moment he gave the word. This accounts for the apparent neglect of Diaz to give battle the moment the Federals came in range.

VERA CRUZ, Mexico, Oct. 24.—The city is rapidly regaining its normal aspect. The police service was resumed to-day, and within two days the railroad will be operating again on a regular schedule. The telegraph wires have also been fixed between here and Mexico City.

There is much hearty public recognition of the services rendered by the United States Consul and the Captain of the United States cruiser Des Moines in protecting foreigners and their interests. There was no other foreign warship in the port. Other ships in harbor were American, French, German, Spanish, and British merchant vessels.

Spies are denouncing to the authorities everybody who participated in the rebellion.

In the fighting the Mexican gunboat Morelos fired two shells, the explosion of which caused a body of rebels to vacate a church they had occupied.

JUAREZ, Oct. 24.—News of a battle between rebels and Federals last week in the Casas Grandes District was reported here to-day to Gen. Trucy Aubert. According to the belated report, Federals under Gen. Blanco routed a large force of rebels. Seven were killed on both sides in an all-day engagement.

VERA CRUZ ITSELF AGAIN.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Vera Cruz, according to dispatches received by the State and the Navy Departments, was as quiet to-day as if there had been no battle yesterday. Commander Hughes of the United States cruiser Des Moines telegraphed that the estimate of the total killed and wounded was 100. The medical officers of the Des Moines and other vessels in the port were assisting in the care of the wounded. The Americans at Vera Cruz fared better than they expected, meeting with no casualties and losing none of their property.

The Mexican soldiers, Commander Hughes stated, faithfully guarded everything belonging to foreigners. The cable station was not tuoched, and, in fact, no buildings or property of any kind in the city were destroyed. The city is now held by the regulars, and there is no sign of any further attempt by the followers of Diaz to rally and fight for the continuation of the revolution.

The port has been reopened to commerce, and merchant vessels are clearing as usual for New York and other places. The Federal officials have reopened the Custom House.

PIERRE BERTON DEAD.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—The death is announced of Pierre Berton, part author of "The Two Little Vagabonds," and "Zaza."

Pierre Francois Samuel Berton was born in Paris in 1842. He came of a family of actors, his grandfather having been the famous Samson of the Comédie Française. His father, Francis Berton, was also a well-known actor. M. Berton made his début at the Gymnase in 1859, and passed successively to the Odéon, the Comédie Française, the Vaudeville, and the Porte St. Martin.

Among his principal creations were "L'Ami des Femmes," "Le Rendezvous," "Fédora," and "La Tosca." Among the plays of which he was the author, in addition to his share in "The Two Little Vagabonds," are "Zaza," "La Belle Marseillaise," "Les Chouans," and "La Vertu de ma Femme."

FIERCE BERLIN FOOD RIOT.

Two Thousand Women Raid a Butcher's Shop—Manager Badly Hurt.

BERLIN, Oct. 24.—The "dear food" riots increased in violence to-day, when some 2,000 women raided a butcher's shop in the Wedding district, demolished the premises and stole the meat. The manager was seriously injured. All the other butcher shops, in the district have been closed and barricaded.

The police have been ordered out in strong force, as the district, which is in the north of Berlin, has on previous occasions been the scene of violent disturbances and it is feared that these may be repeated.

Mrs. H. B. Jacobs Better.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—Mrs. Henry Barton Jacobs of Baltimore, whose health has caused anxiety for some time past, is on the liner George Washington on her way to America. Her condition has considerably improved. Mrs. Jocobs was the widow of Robert Garrett, President of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

TEACHERS DESERVE PENSIONS, SAYS TAFT

EXPLAINS METAL BILL VETO

It Would Have Ruined Thousands of Workmen, He Declares—President Appeals to the Farmers.

POLAND SPRINGS, Me., Oct. 24.—After a vacation of nearly two months President Taft starts back to-morrow to Washington for the Winter.

The Maine Teachers' Association gave the President a rousing welcome to-day in the Portland Auditorium. In his address he said that he had learned the value of teaching when he was Governor General of the Philippines, and drew a parallel between them and Government employes. Both these classes, he said, should be taken care of after they had spent the active years of their lives in their effort to serve.

"What is to be done," the President asked, "with the teachers who devote their lives to instruction at low salaries compared with the cost of living, and then reach the time when they must quit? We must devise some scheme in order that there may be justice to a profession that I regard as one of the highest and most important. We should see to it that teachers who have served should not be thrown out with nothing to live on when they have passed their stage of usefulness."

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 24.—A letter from President Taft to the American Hardware Manufacturers' Association and the National Hardware Association was read at to-day's session of the convention. In it he said:

"I am a firm believer in a tariff board or tariff commission. I do not contend that the tariff can be taken out of politics in the sense that it will never be made the subject of political controversy. Men differ radically as to the economical wisdom of a protective tariff or a tariff for revenue only, and that must always be the subject of political discussion. But there is a means of taking the ascertainments of facts away from a tribunal like the Ways and Means Committee, which is necessarily hurried in its conclusions and necessarily lacking in the thoroughness and temper which are essential to reach impartial conclusions."

The President then took up his veto of the bill reducing the tariff on the metals schedule and explained the complexity of the industry affected by it.

"I vetoed the bill, which would have spelled ruin to many of you," he went on, "because I was unwilling to approve legislation which vitally affected not only millions of workingmen and the families dependent on them, but hundreds of millions of dollars worth of stocks of goods in the hands of storekeepers and distributors generally, without first providing for a careful and disinterested inquiry into the conditions of the whole industry. And so, I say, we must not make legitimate business the football of politics. We must have investments, from which to secure a large wages fund, which is needed to support the wage earners. We must inspire in the business men who control those investments the confidence that they will not be driven out of business."

BEVERLY, Mass., Oct. 24.—President Taft to-night made public a special appeal to farmers of Minnesota and the Northwest to remain true to their Republican beliefs. His arguments were submitted in a letter to Gov. A. O. Eberhart of Minnesota. He said in part:

"The men and women of the Northwest country have a special interest in Republican success this year. They are sharing in the general prosperity of the Nation, and the continuance and growth of this prosperity are in large degree dependent upon Republican success next month. The Republican Party is not responsible for good crops. It does not make the sun to shine or the grass to grow, but it is responsible for the enactment of laws which make it possible, if the crops are good, that there shall be an American market for them, and that they shall be sold at good prices to those who have the means to buy them.

"It is not necessary to jog the memory of the older farmers of your State as to what happened when the Democratic Party passed the Wilson Tariff bill. Wheat went down to 40 cents a bushel, corn to 21 cents, oats to 18 cents, potatoes to 27 cents. In forty years farm prices had never been so low. Our farmers were struggling under debt, mortgages were even being foreclosed, and the deplorable condition that existed among those who tilled the soil will certainly never be forgotten by the sufferers."

HOKE SMITH SEES VICTORY.

Tells Gov. Wilson He Doesn't Need the East to Insure His Election.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 24.—Gov. Wilson found himself facing a difficult task to-day in refusing to attend the meeting of the Woodrow Wilson Club of Princeton University at Alexander Hall, but he steadfastly clung to his determination not to make a political address until Col. Roosevelt was again actively in the campaign.

The college men wanted Gov. Wilson there especially because they were ready to make the announcement that a canvass of the students showed that he would receive a great majority of their votes. Of the total 1,112 ballots were cast for Gov. Wilson, 142 for Col. Roosevelt, 153 for President Taft, 8 for Eugene V. Debs, and 1 for "Joe Gish," a dog now dead, but once famous as the mascot of the class of 1910.

Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia arrived in town to-day to address the meeting and the students had arranged for his entertainment at the Nassau Inn. When the Governor heard of that, however, he had Senator Smith taken to his home in Cleveland Lane.

The absence of Gov. Wilson naturally put a slight damper on the enthusiasm at the meeting, but there was plenty of it for all that, and every mention of his name was the signal for long outbursts of applause.

Senator Smith, who has been delivering addresses in the Middle West, brought the Governor rosy reports of the situation there. He told the Governor that he seemed certain of carrying enough States in the West, Middle West, and South to assure his election despite what the East might do. Later at the meeting he gave this information in some detail to the students and evoked vociferous applause such as is seldom heard outside the football grounds.

Probably for Gov. Wilson—Kansas and South Dakota. In California the fight is a close one between Gov. Wilson and Col. Roosevelt, neither having a very decided advantage.

WILSON AND TAFT ASSAILED.

Guardians of Liberty Declare Themselves for Roosevelt.

Through their official organ, The American Citizen, which will appear to-morrow, the Guardians of Liberty will indorse the candidacy of Theodore Roosevelt and assail alleged relations of both Woodrow Wilson and President Taft with the Roman Catholic Church.

The Guardians of Liberty are the successors of the American Protection Association, familiarly known as the "A. P. A." of two decades ago. In the list of members appear the names of ex-Congressman Charles D. Haines, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Admiral Baird, Admiral George Dewey, and Gen. Daniel E. Sickles. Gen. Horatio C. King, Bull Moose candidate for State Controller, was a member of the organization, but resigned shortly after his nomination for office after having made public a letter in which he disclaimed all knowledge of the anti-Catholic sentiments of the society, and explained that he had been ignorant of the true character of the Guardians when he joined the association.

"Rome Pledges Vote to Taft" is the first line of the six-column head on the first page, from which the following is quoted:

"The most unscrupulous body of men on earth have promised to deliver the solid vote of their blind followers to Taft. The Republican National Committee are satisfactorily convinced they will do so."

Then follows what purports to be a disclosure of negotiations made between President Taft and his campaign managers for the support of the American Hierarchy of the Catholic Church.

Under the heading "Knights of Columbus Are for Wilson" is published an attack upon the New Jersey Governor because of the many Catholics whom he has appointed to office in that State. The statements of Father Leahy of Princeton, Father Wynne, S. J., and Father Burke, C. S. P., are quoted to show that Gov. Wilson is seeking the support of the Catholic Church. The statement of Father Leahy is a reply to a query addressed to him whether or not Mr. Wilson as President of Princeton was liberal in his views. It is emphatically in the affirmative. Father Wynne, who is one of the editors of the Catholic Encyclopaedia, is shown to have spoken gratefully of Mr. Wilson's scholarly appreciation of the work. Father Burke praised President Wilson for his fairness to Catholic questions in history. The fact that Bishop McFaul of Trenton was the first to congratulate Gov. Wilson upon his nomination is also hailed as sinister

"Last week," says another article, "Theodore Roosevelt was shot by a Papal parochial school graduate. He was taken to a Papal hospital, the first man sent for was Father Vattman, his head physician was Dr. Murphy, his head nurse was Sister Fitzgerald, and the dispatches informed us that 'the Sisters of Mercy flitted about uttering prayers for the doctor,' as if he needed prayers with such a patient."

The newspaper, however, reluctantly accepts Roosevelt as "the least of three evils." President Taft is condemned most bitterly. The paper remarks editorially:

"The Citizen can advise you at this time to just this extent, namely, that you work against the re-election of Mr. Taft and cast your vote against him and his coadjutors, the American hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church."

MR. DOOLEY MAKES ROOSEVELT LAUGH

NO DOCTORS WERE AROUND

The Colonel Joins the Family In His Khaki Suit—Improving Hourly—He'll Make That Speech.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, Oct. 24.—"I thought I—I mean Mrs. Roosevelt—gave orders that nobody was to be admitted," said the Colonel, trying to be severe as Mr. Dooley walked into his sick room to-day, followed by Robert J. Collier and Mark Sullivan.

make the Colonel talk."

"That ordher," Mr. Dooley explained, "applied only to men fr'm County Watherford. Me Uncle Mike was a Kerry man."

The Colonel lay back and laughed, while Finley Peter Dunne spread himself over a couple of chairs and motioned to Collier and Sullivan to sit down. Even Mrs. Roosevelt laughed.

"You are a privileged character, Mr. Dunne," she said, "but even you mustn't

"Make him talk," said Mr. Dooley. "If I could get a patent f'r kapin' him still I'd go back there and bounce Lord Koncosset, or whativir the landlord's name is."

Nevertheless, the Colonel didn't say much. He told one or two stories, and so did Mr. Dooley, who, by the way, is a convinced Bull Moose and has been out on the stump for Roosevelt in the West. Then they took their leave, and they were the only visitors the Colonel saw to-day. He did move from his sick room down into the writing room, and he sent to New York for John McGrath, his head stenographer. McGrath is due there the first thing in the morning, so it looks as if something would be issued by 11 A. M. in the way of statements, and that the Colonel's hat may be back in the ring by that time. Mr. Dooley says the Colonel "nivir looked betther." "He surely is a broth of a boy," said Mr. Dooley, and for a moment Jim Amos, the head butler and official bouncer, relaxed long enough to smile assent.

There are rumors that to-morrow the Old Guard may be allowed on Sagamore Hill. The Sagamore Constitution, however, reposes a veto power in Mrs. Edith Carow Roosevelt, so you can't always tell.

At this hour the indications are that the Colonel will make that speech in Madison Square Garden. John McGrath believes that is what he was called to Oyster Bay for. Dr. Lambert says that if the Colonel talks one minute longer than half an hour he himself, Lambert, will personally clamber on the Colonel and physically shut him up.

From morning till night Col. Roosevelt was up and fully dressed to-day, walking unassisted about the house. It was the first time since he was shot that he had been out of bed long at a time, but he felt so much better after his two days of rest at home that he refused to stay upstairs in his room another day. He put on his khaki riding suit and surprised his family by appearing in the living room and saying that he was going to have luncheon with the others.

Col. Roosevelt was so much better that the physicians who have been coming from New York to care for him thought it unnecessary to make the trip to-day. Dr. Scurry L. Terrill, the Colonel's personal physician, and Dr. George W. Fuller of Oyster Bay spent a few minutes with him in the morning and again later in the day, and found that his condition was improving steadily.

He felt no pain, although whenever he raised his right arm or breathed deeply he was reminded of his injury by the grating of the ends of the fractured rib. It probably will be several weeks before he will have full use of his right arm.

In spite of his improved condition, however, he found that he was far from having his usual strength, and in the afternoon he became fatigued and slept for two hours.

J. J. HILL AT TAFT MEETING.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 24.—More than one person who attended last night's Taft meeting was surprised to see James J. Hill occupying a box and appearing interested in the speeches of Secretary Stimson and others. When the meeting was over Mr. Hill met the Cabinet officer and congratulated him on his talk.

Mr. Hill seldom attends political meetings, and his presence last night was, perhaps, due to the fact that his old associate, William B. Dean, a Director of the Great Northern, presided.

The Time Has Come for Men To Choose Heavier Clothing

Until now you have been basking in the smiles of a sunny October in your Summer suit.

But November will soon clap an injunction on such proceedings. Time to choose your new Suit—TODAY!

Plenty of opportunity in this Gimbel collection.

Eight of the finest tailors in America have sent us their best—each accord'ng to his specialty.

From one, remarkable Suits at $25; from another, dress clothing of the highest type; from still another, luxurious Suits at $35 to $45—much the most satisfactory way; for this is an age of specialization; and it is unfair to expect any one set of tailors to do all things equally well.

In Business Suits Alone There Are Twenty-four Separate Models

This takes no account of a rich variety of distinguished materials in each model, or varying sets of dimensions, which insure practically instantaneous fit for men who are tall or short, slender or stout, or just average.

Prices, $15 to $48. And, in particular—

A Special-Price Event Today in

Men's $22.50 and $25 Fall Suits at $16.75

These valuations are according to OUR standards; for the Suits come from our regular tailors, made up for us from their surplus materials, after finishing their season's orders; or incomplete size-ranges from our Fall stock.

A choice of several fine models in two- and three-button styles, in well-bred materials, all-wool and mostly in dark effects, including plain blue serge. All sizes in the group.

And Just a Reminder of Some Excellent Fall Overcoats at $18.50

Black, blue, Oxford gray; Chesterfield style; or in smart mixtures, in Raglan or "Avenue" style. Many silk-lined, $22 to $25 grades. Fourth Floor

Men's Blanket Robes—Much Comfort for $5

Made of soft, thick blankets, in a large range of handsome Jacquard designs and rich color-combinations. Finished our way, with all seams piped and satin yokes. Two styles—with cord at neck and waist, or buttoning like a coat, with cord at waist. A full $5 worth of any man's money.

Men's Warm All-Wool Sweater Coats

For the Autumn golfer, the football enthusiast and the motorist. Well made, evenly knit—all with pockets. Gray, maroon, and navy—all wool, $4; all worsted, $5. Main Floor

Men's WELBRED Shoes—$6, $6.50, $7 and $9

Latitude in Style—from a conservative straight-toe last to very English looking Shoes, with low, broad heels, and pointed toes.

TAFT AND WILSON DEFINE THE ISSUES

Both Candidates in Interviews Discuss Tariff and Both Are Confident of Election.

A NEW AGE, SAYS WILSON

Evils That Democratic Party Must Cure—Taft Says People Authorized Present Tariff.

In this week's issue of Harper's Weekly, which will be delivered to the newsdealers this morning, will appear interviews with Woodrow Wilson, the Democratic candidate for President, and President Taft. Gov. Wilson declares that if elected President he will be "the spokesman of my fellow-citizens as to the way in which our Government ought to be conducted." Both Gov. Wilson and President Taft say they are confident of the result in November, but the President adds that whatever the result may be he is thankful for having had the opportunity to do his best as an American citizen.

"I am one of those," Gov. Wilson says, "who are entering upon this campaign with absolute confidence. So far as I am concerned, I not only have not made a promise to any man, but no man has either hinted at or dared to ask me to make a promise. I am free for that reason to act as I deem best within whatever authority will be granted to me, and free to hear the counsels of my fellow-citizens.

"I believe in my heart that the Democratic Party is now offering to serve the people. But I cannot put myself at their service unless they know what there is to do—unless they know what the situation is and what it is that we seek to cure. There are certain fundamental evils in our politics—evils which have crept upon us unawares in some degree, but, nevertheless, they have come upon us until they have the grip of a giant in maintaining control of the Government of this country and of its policy—and those are the evils we seek to cure."

Gov. Wilson remarks that the life of America of to-day is an altogether different life from what it was twenty years or even a decade ago. Our economic conditions, he says, have changed absolutely from top to bottom, and with the change has come a change in the organization of our lives. Things that were said on platforms of a dozen years ago would sound antiquated now.

"We stand in the presence of a new age," he says, "to which we must give the attention of men who know that there is no guidance to be afforded them except their own intelligence and their own conscience, because what makes every man stand erect and feel his manhood is the feeling that he is determining public questions for himself at no man's bidding."

Next Gov. Wilson deals with the labor question. "It is not possible," he says, "for me to look at the question of labor separately as if laboring men did not form a part and the fundamental part of our society, and it is not possible for any other man and still claim to be honest with himself.

"Why have we a labor question at all? For the simple reason that the laboring men and the employer are not intimate associates now, and the personal equation no longer exists between the two. Modern corporations, system, and the elimination of waste have done away with that condition when individual employes dealt directly with individual employer. At the time when this condition obtained were framed most of our present labor laws, all of which, I can safely say, are obsolete. The labor question is a question of society, of how many are going to tackle the tasks and work of the world, and how they are going to be related to it, and what their just rewards shall be. As nine-tenths of the men of the world are working men that society has to protect, society cannot afford to disregard this great group. The evolution of the individual employer into a corporation gives the corresponding right to the laboring men of organizing. I have never found any man who was jealous in regard to the interests of the laboring man, much less jealous of his forming organizations whenever he pleased, for any legitimate purpose. But mere organization is not self-sufficient; organization cannot accomplish what society as a whole can accomplish through appropriate legislation."

The tariff follows next and Gov. Wilson states bluntly that a lifelong conviction of his is that a very great wrong has been done in this country in the application made of the policy. He says:

"What I want to know is which duty and how much of a duty is serviceable to the country, without regard to the doctrine of protection.

"Apply the rule of general interest and we take the tariff out of politics. Tariff for revenue only likewise brings the desired result.

"We are to act upon the fundamental principle of the Democratic Party, not free trade, but tariff for revenue, and we must approach that by such avenues, by such stages, and at such a place as will be consistent with the stability and safety of the business of the country. We may prudently bring this tariff down to our children on a proper basis.

"We are not attacking men, we are attacking a system. The men are, most of them, honest. The great majority believe that in serving their own they are serving the interests of the country at large. Their conception of prosperity is that it will best proceed and gather under their own management.

"Americans are an eminently just and intensely practical people, who do not wish to lay violent hands upon their own affairs, but who claim the right to scrutinize them, and whenever necessary to readjust, purify, rearrange, without destroying or even injuring the elements, but filling their altered combination with a new spirit. This is the task of the Democratic Party."

President Taft begins by saying that it seems to be that the two crucial questions in the present campaign are the trust and the tariff.

"Criticism," says the President, "has not been wanting as regards my attitude toward the tariff and the trusts, and politically I am attacked on the plea that I have tried to criss-cross my former views, my former promises, my former actions, when, as a matter of fact, my views and promises and actions are always the same.

"The conditions existing to-day, so far as the trusts and the tariff are concerned, are no more and no less than what the people wanted, because such conditions have sprung from the operation of laws which the people authorized."

The President defends the action of the Government in the suits brought for the dissolution of the Standard Oil and the Tobacco Trust, and maintains that the results have been effectual, that competition has been restored, and that business has in nowise been disturbed.

On the subject of the tariff, the President, among other things, has this to say:

"I am aware that the current beneath all political agitation is a voice criticizing me because I approved the Payne-Aldrich tariff. The platform upon which I was elected President contained a revision plank, and I committed myself to it as intending downward revision, as I stand thus committed to it now. But so long as we carry the tariff into politics, or politics into the tariff, it cannot be hoped to solve this great economic question. I succeeded, so far as such things are possible in actual practice, in removing political influence from an economic subject.

"The statistics of the three years of the Payne law show that there was a substantial reduction in many schedules. The law provided for future revision by giving authority to the President to create a non-partisan board of experts to make a world-wide inquiry into cost of production and to develop and systematize other tariff data. Under the operation of the Payne law, prosperity has been gradually restored since the panic of 1907. There have been no disastrous failures and no disastrous strikes. The percentage of reduction below the Dingley bill is shown in the large free list and in the lower percentage of the tariff collected on the total value of the goods imported. The figures show that under the Dingley bill, which was in force 144 months, the average per cent. of the imports that came in free was in value 44.3 per cent. of the total importations, and that under the Payne bill, which has been in force 35 months, the average per cent. in value of the imports which have come in free amounts to 51.2 per cent. of the total; that the average ad valorem of the duties on all importations under the 12 years of the Dingley bill was 45.8 per cent., while under the 35 months of the Payne bill this was 41.2 per cent., and that the average ad valorem of the dutiable imports under the Dingley bill was 25.5 per cent., while under the Payne bill it was 20.1 per cent. In other words, considering only reductions on dutiable goods, the reduction in duties from the Dingley bill to the Payne bill was 10 per cent., and considering both free and dutiable reductions, it amounted to 21 per cent."

The President makes reference to the approaching election, and says that no matter what the outcome he will be grateful indeed for the honors conferred upon him.

CONTRACT OBLIGATIONS OUTSTANDING.

Rent of telegraph and telephone and offices to November	$2,400.00
Publicity department, for printing sundry pieces of literature as per contracts already entered into	4,400.00

Among the contributions under $100 there are ninety-two for $50 each, 170 for $25 each, and also thirty-seven for $20, fifteen for $16, 377 for $10, 624 for $5, and 348 for $2.

Besides these, there are 4,687 persons who contributed $1 each. There are a great many contributions of less than $1, most of which are anonymous. There are twelve subscriptions of fifty sents each, sixteen of twenty-five cents, and two of ten cents each.

"As was indicated in a similar preliminary statement made some weeks ago," said Treasurer Hooker last night, "the campaign has been conducted with the strictest economy in every department. The small expenditure has only been rendered possible through the wide-spread volunteer movement which is back of this campaign and which was evidenced in the Progressive Conventions at Chicago and Syracuse.

"Although the time has been very short, the popular contributions in small amounts have been received from every district in the United States in increasing numbers. The receipts and disbursements of both the Chicago and New York headquarters are combined in the single report."

DIXON PROPHESIES.

Senator Sees a Landslide for Roosevelt—All Is His.

Senator Joseph M. Dixon, Col. Roosevelt's National Campaign Manager, took a rosy look into the future yesterday and saw only a landslide for the Colonel.

"The avalanche has begun; the landslide is on its way," said the Senator, puffing vigorously at a long-stemmed pipe at the Bull Moose headquarters in the Hotel Manhattan. Senator Dixon says he prefers a pipe.

"We will carry Pennsylvania by more than 100,000 plurality. We will sweep Illinois by more than 100,000. We will carry Michigan by 30,000. Confidential reports from Indiana indicate that we will carry that State. Reports from Maine to-day show a great stiffening up for our cause since last week. We are making a great fight in Maine, and they tell me we are sure of carrying it. Allen White sends word from Kansas that we are surely going to carry that State. We will win in the northern part of New Jersey, if we do not actually get the State."

"Is that all?" a doubting visitor asked.

"Well," replied the Senator, warming up, "we are going to carry New York, I honestly believe. I hadn't thought so up to now, but I have changed my mind. I am sure we will carry the city. What do you think?" he asked of one of his audience.

"Not a chance in the world," replied a matter-of-fact reporter. "Wilson will carry the city by 102,000."

"Well, Brooklyn is a cinch, anyway," said Senator Dixon enthusiastically.

ELIOT ENTERS CAMPAIGN.

Makes His First Political Speech for Democrats on Tariff Issue.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 24.—Dr. C. W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard, made the first political speech of his long career to-day at a Democratic rally in Tremont Temple. Senator Williams of Mississippi was another speaker. Richard Olney presided.

Dr. Eliot justified his appearance on the political platform by calling attention to the very wide differences of opinion among college men on the political situation. Then he entered upon a discussion of the "enormously high protective tariff."

"Whom does the tariff protect?" he asked. "Don't we all know that the lowest wages obtain in the highest protected industries, and that the production of certain industries has had no influence in raising the wages? Don't we know that the American market has not been exploited as it should?

"Who is benefited by the tariff? It is the capitalists, not the laborers.

"We want the Democratic Party to take the advantages of the general public, the general consumer, as its motives. We want this to be taken particularly toward taxation. For tariff is nothing but badly collected taxation.

"Liberty protected by law is the foundation of the spirit of the American people. When that liberty is threatened the people rally to its support. In this campaign it is threatened by a very new and dangerous element."

Dr. Eliot asked his audience if the Democratic Party were not the safest and most trustworthy to deal with constitutional and judicial changes advocated in the several planks of the various platforms. He analyzed the chief issues of each party, and indicated that the only "safe and sane" policies are those of the Democrats.

"You are now hearing a great deal about returning the power to the hands of the people. The best way to do that is to put in the Democratic Party."

REPUBLICAN LEADERS INCENSED AT PALMER

A Political Device, They Term His Statement That Sulzer Has Only Straus to Fear.

SURE HE KNOWS BETTER

The Democratic Chairman Repeats That Swing to Bull Moose Candidate Has Set In.

Republican State leaders were wrought up yesterday over the statement of Chairman George M. Palmer of the Democratic State Committee on Wednesday that reports showed that Job E. Hedges, the Republican candidate for Governor, was rapidly losing ground, especially in the strongly Republican districts, and that the fight from now on would be between William Sulzer, the Democratic candidate, and Oscar S. Straus, the Bull Moose candidate.

"Chairman Palmer's statement is a transparent device intended to lead voters who favor Hedges to vote for Straus, and thus throw away their votes and so make the election of Sulzer a certainty," said State Senator Morton E. Lewis, manager of the Republican State campaign. "It has been perfectly apparent from the beginning that Mr. Straus's candidacy was being furthered and is now being pushed on by the Democratic Party in order that Tammany may retain its control of the Government of the State and continue to use such control for the financial advantage of its leaders in New York City.

"Outside of the large up-State cities, Mr. Straus has no strength. In some of the larger cities a considerable number of the Jewish voters are likely to vote for him, but of such Jewish voters, the larger number are Democrats. This statement is not based on conjecture, but is founded on facts, on detailed reports of actual canvasses made by conservative, trained workers, who have for years furnished the estimates to the Republican State Committee. Their work in former years has demonstrated their capacity and the soundness of their information. Their reports show conclusively that Mr. Straus is weak in the great majority of up-State districts—much weaker than Roosevelt.

"Instead of concentrating his energies against Mr. Straus, Mr. Palmer should give some time and careful thought to an explanation of Mr. Sulzer's connection with the Alaska Industrial Company, his Central American activities, and the legal difficulties in which he has been from time to time involved in connection with his numerous corporation promotion schemes."

Chairman Palmer said yesterday that later reports only bore out his earlier ones.

"Evidence is coming in every day," he said, "that a great swing to the Bull Moose candidate has set in. It may even be increased by the Madison Square Garden Bull Moose meeting next week. It is no use for us to deny that there is plenty of Bull Moose sentiment everywhere and that it is growing rapidly."

Chairman Palmer said that he had obtained proof that a letter, which was being universally distributed by the Republicans asking for campaign contributions to use in the election of Mr. Hedges had been sent out through the President of a New York banking corporation.

WITHDRAWS VILLARD CHARGE

Oswald Garrison Villard sent a telegram yesterday to William Sulzer, Democratic candidate for Governor, at Schenectady, denying the statement attributed to Mr. Sulzer that serious charges were brought against Mr. Villard, in connection with an estate. The executors of the estate of Henry Villard, Mr. Villard's father, also sent Mr. Sulzer a telegram denying that any charges were ever brought against Mr. Villard by them. This is Mr. Villard's letter:

>
> In The New York Sun and TIMES of this morning you are quoted as stating at Utica, N. Y., on Oct. 23, 1912, that I should explain "the serious charges brought against him [myself] by relatives for the alleged looting of their joint estate." This statement is absolutely without any foundation. No relatives of mine have claimed that I looted their or any estate which I hold with them, either jointly or in any other way. The statement made by you is manufactured out of whole cloth. The only estate in which I am interested is that of my father, Henry Villard, and I am not and never have been an executor or a trustee of that estate, simply a beneficiary. No charge was ever made with reference to the administration of that estate by any one, nor has the estate been looted. I demand that you furnish proof of your statement or immediately retract it. If you do not do so, I shall instruct my attorneys to proceed against you for making false statements.
>
> OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD.

This is the telegram from the executors:

> Oct. 24, 1912.
>
>
> No charge has ever been brought against Mr. Oswald G. Villard in connection with the estate of Henry Villard, of which we have been the sole executors. There has been no maladministration of any kind in connection with this estate, and Mr. Villard's relation to it has simply been that of a beneficiary under the will.
>
> HORACE WHITE,
> FANNY G. VILLARD,
> (Mrs. Henry Villard.)

Mr. Sulzer is on a campaign trip up-State and will return to the city at the end of the week.

Special to The New York Times.

> Oswald Garrison Villard, Principal Stockholder of The New York Post:
>
> I have received your telegram in which you deny that relatives of yours brought charges against you for the alleged looting of their joint estate. I will accept your denial and take your word for it.
>
> But what about the public and the official charge of Mayor Gaynor that your paper looted the Treasury of the City of New York out of $17,000?
>
> WILLIAM SULZER.

Mr. Sulzer made no comment on the Villard matter other than the statement in the telegram.

This position has been held by Grover Cleveland, George B. McClellan, and Joseph H. Choate. Mr. Root's duties will include a series of lectures before the university on a selected subject, as yet unannounced.

Gifts in cash were acknowledged to-day to a total of $405,297, including $20,000 from the estate of Isaac C. Wyman, and $300,000 for the Charlotte Elizabeth Procter Fellowship Fund, both of which will be devoted to the new graduate school. Mr. Choate, the Stafford Little Lecturer last year, has given a prize of $500 for dissertations on subjects of National importance, for which he has chosen the topics, and $5,700 comes in the form of scholarships.

STRAUS ENDS HIS TOUR.

Speaks to 4,500 Enthusiastic Hearers in Cleveland—Starts for Home.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 24.—Oscar S. Straus, Secretary of Commerce and Labor in President Roosevelt's Cabinet, and Bull Moose candidate for Governor of New York, speaking to-night at the Central Armory as "a humble messenger of the Progressive movement," brought to Cleveland Bull Moosers the message that "Progressivism is marching on, and as it marches forward is sweeping the bosses out and bringing back the rule of the people."

Mr. Straus, accompanied by his wife, reached Cleveland at 6 o'clock this evening from Cincinnati. S. T. Everett, the Rev. Dr. Worth M. Tippy, Rabbi S. Margolies, and H. Linndale Smith formed a reception committee that met the distinguished New Yorker at the station. Randolph W. Walton, Progressive candidate for Congressman at Large, joined Mr. Straus at Columbus nad came here with him. The visitors were taken to the Hotel Statler for dinner. Mr. Straus left Cleveland for New York at 10:25 P. M.

The doors of the Central Armory were opened to the public at 6 o'clock. The hall filled slowly, and when the crowd was largest not more than 4,500 persons were in the hall that holds 8,000. The crowd was enthusiastic, and it gave evidence of its spirit in the reception tendered to Mr. Straus when he entered a little before 8 o'clock.

President Taft's name was not once mentioned by the speaker, although he referred to the President indirectly once or twice. He took two or three shots at Gov. Wilson, challenging the Governor's position, particularly with reference to the minimum wage question.

His speech was full of sentiment. He dwelt particularly with the social justice of the Progressive platform, and often indulged in attacks upon the bosses, naming specifically Barnes and Murphy of New York. Not once did he refer to the tariff or the trusts.

THE VOICE

By Margaret Deland

Author of "The Iron Woman," "The Awakening of Helene Ritchie," etc.

A new Dr. Lavendar story and a new heroine—two Margaret Deland treats which make the perfect holiday book for reading or giving.

By way of good measure, this story is located in old Chester, Phillippa is the girl—an old-fashioned little thing, full of pleasant silences and soft gaiety and simple, startling truth-telling. Her father is a religious fanatic, and her lover is the orthodox village parson whose unconscious affection for Phillippa is most skillfully portrayed.

The parson's wooing of Phillippa is quite the quaintest and most charming story that Mrs. Deland has yet told.

By ONOTO WATANA

Author of "A Japanese Nightingale," "Tama," etc.

Only Japan could be the scene of this daintily picturesque yet vitally human story, with its charming quaintness of costume and manners, its note of high heroism, and its curious, thrilling drama of birth and death, of life and love. Framed in colorful atmosphere that is genuinely Japanese, the appealing figure of the fragile Geisha girl whom the gods at last blessed with a son forms a picture of blended pathos and idyllic love that clings long in the reader's memory.

BULGARS CAPTURE KIRK-KILISSEH

Eastern Army Flanking the Turks.

"Despite the heavy fire of the Turkish batteries, the Bulgarian regiments followed the fleeing Turks, whose losses were enormous. Their ranks were scattered and thinned by the Bulgarian quick-firing guns, placed in excellent positions. Whole detachments of their troops were mown down.

"Gen. Dimitrieff at the same time ordered the advance of the Eastern Army, which was massed under his orders west and east of the road from Tirnovo to Kirk-Kilisseh, and the battle began on this wing yesterday.

"After taking Kirk-Kilisseh, the Eastern Army will continue its march southward, and the western wing of the Turkish Army, as well as Adrianople, will be cut off from Constantinople. Turkish prisoners say that great disorder prevails in the Turkish ranks."

A dispatch from The Daily Telegraph's Constantinople correspondent gives a version of the Kirk-Kilisseh operations which depicts them as of relatively small importance. The dispatch, which is dated 6 P. M. Thursday, says:

"Yesterday (Wednesday) a severe engagement was fought between the Turkish and Bulgarian Armies extending from east of the River Tundja to north of Kirk-Kilisseh. The Turkish troops, numbering three army corps, advanced from a line from Adrianople to Kirk-Kilisseh with the object of making a reconnaissance in force, to oblige the Bulgarian Army to deploy and to disclose its strength.

Battle Was Desperate.

"The Bulgarian main army was encountered close to the frontier, and for many hours a desperate engagement took place, the losses on both sides being very severe. However, the Turkish troops were not in sufficient force to press home the attack, and eventually retired in perfect order, not pursued by the enemy.

"It has now been decided to evacuate Kirk-Kilisseh, and that all the army corps, (a Turkish army corps numbers between 25,000 and 35,000 men,) with the exception of the one holding Adrianople, shall fall back on the main army, which is concentrated between Baba-Eski and Lule-Burgas. This will bring the strength of the Turkish main army to seven army corps—with four more in reserve in course of formation nearer Constantinople—in a strong position between Baba-Eski and Lule-Burgas, guarding the line of the railroad.

"The Turkish Commander in Chief can await with confidence any attack of the Bulgarian main army. If the enemy refuse to take the offensive, the whole army will advance and force him to a general engagement north of Adrianople.

"The retirement from Kirk-Kilisseh is a purely strategical move to enable all the units of Nazim Pasha's army to concentrate, and in nowise due to yesterday's battle.

"To-morrow Nazim Pasha, the Commander in Chief, leaves for Baba-Eski, which will be the headquarters of the army for the time being. The foreign correspondents arrived there this morning, and the Military Attachés will follow them on Sunday.

"In the meanwhile all non-combatant foreigners are being sent from Adrianople, which is in a position to withstand a siege if necessary."

Adrianople Ready for Attack.

"Martial law was proclaimed in Adrianople some days ago, and nobody is allowed in the streets after 9 o'clock in the evening without a permit. The inhabitants are calmly awaiting events and seem confident in the ability of the Turkish forces to protect them.

"Talaat Bey, the former Minister of the Interior, is very active in enlisting volunteers, and practically the whole adult male population has been enrolled, not only for the defense of the town, but even to take the field.

"The population of Adrianople is rendering every assistance to the army, particularly in the supply of stores. The Government is accepting taxes in kind, and arrears are now being gladly paid in corn, oats, and barley.

"Fugitives from the country near the frontier who have come into Adrianople for safety declare that there is an absolute famine in Eastern Rumelia and that the prospects for the Winter, which would be gloomy enough in ordinary circumstances, are simply appalling. The neighboring villages are deserted by the peasants, who are afraid of being shot or captured by the Bulgarians.

"The torrential rains, which are usual at this season of the year, make the roads almost impassable. They are bad even for military convoys with their motor transport, and the ox-wagons, the flying refugees who travel on foot, men, women, and children carrying their household goods, make a most melancholy spectacle."

Greek Women Massacred.

"Continuing yesterday the pursuit of the Turks, the Fourth Division of the Greek Army occupied the town of Servia, about 25 miles from the Greek frontier, and the bridge across the River Aliakmo, leading to Yoshani. The Fifth Division occupied the heights near the river, driving the Turks from the further side.

"The enemy's forces were composed of twelve battalions with six field batteries. They suffered great losses, and in full flight they abandoned twenty-two guns with a large quantity of ammunition and stores.

"A heart-rending sight was witnessed when the Greeks entered the town of Servia. The Turks before leaving had massacred seventy Greek women and children who lived there. Greek mothers were lying dead across doorsteps and in courtyards in every kind of position, indicating that they had tried to protect their offspring. There had been a systematic house-to-house massacre.

"The indignation of the Greek soldiers is intense, but the troops are well in hand, and no reprisals are feared.

Rejoicing in Sofia.

SOFIA, Oct. 24.—When Kirk-Kilisser fell the Turkish troops, it is stated, retired in disorder in the direction of Bunar-Hissar, fourteen miles to the southeast.

One report received here is that 5,000 men surrendered to the Bulgarians, two Turkish Generals being among those captured. Another report is that the garrison at Kirk-Kilisseh numbered nearly 50,000 men, and that all fell prisoners to the Bulgarians.

The Turkish garrison of Adrianople suffered heavy losses in a sortie attempted last night from the northeastern quarter of the town. They left twelve cannon on the field when they retired.

In an engagement on Tuesday at Marash, at the junction of the Miritza and Arda Rivers, close to Adrianople, the Bulgarians were attacked by 8,000 Turks. After an hour of heavy artillery and rifle fire the Turks were defeated and fled in disorder, leaving the field strewn with dead and wounded. The Bulgarians captured 300 prisoners, a dozen quick-firers, and quantities of munitions.

The Bulgarian troops are now only from three to five miles from the Adrianople redoubts, and are fortifying their positions.

When the news of the fall of Kirk-Kilisseh was received in Sofia vast crowds, bearing the flags of all the allied States, formed processions and marched to the Greek, Servian, Russian, and British Legations, the Palace, and the Military Club. In front of each the national anthem was sung and cheers were given.

Masses will be celebrated throughout the kingdom to-morrow for the Bulgarians who have fallen in the fighting, and thanksgiving services will be held for the success of the Bulgarian arms.

Servian Successes.

BELGRADE, Oct. 24.—Official announcement is made here to-night that the Servian forces have occupied besides Novi-Bazar, Pristina, Kumanova, Kratovo, and Kotchana.

Detachments of the Servian Army entered Kumanova this afternoon after annihilating the Tukish batteries. The fighting around that town lasted three days. The Turkish artillery was ineffective.

The taking of the Turkish town of Novi-Bazar was achieved only after three days' severe fighting, during which there was much slaughter both among the Servians and the Turks.

The small town of Strazin, between Egri-Palanka and Kumanova, was captured yesterday by the Servians.

Stories of hard fought encounters with the Arnaut tribesmen and Turkish regulars are told by soldiers who were wounded in the earlier fighting at Prepalatz Pass, forty miles to the South of Nish. Many of these have been brought here for treatment.

The battle lasted thirteen hours. The Turks lost over a thousand killed, while the Servian casualties were also considerable.

Rain Impedes Montenegrins.

RIEKA, Montenegro, Oct. 24.—The Montenegrin troops, advancing in a southeusterly direction, reached a point about 8½ miles from the Turkish town of Scutari yesterday afternoon. Military operations have been greatly interfered with by rain during the last two days.

King Nicholas, whose headquarters had been established here provisionally, crossed Lake Scutari yesterday and joined the troops at the Malissori village of Skla, where he met his three sons, with whom he held a council of war. The outcome of this was that Prince Mirko was appointed commander of the Montenegrin brigade which distinguished itself at Detchich and Tushi.

The King will proceed to the town of Servia, which has just been taken by the Greek forces.

Explanations in Constantinople.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 24.—A Turkish defeat east of Tunja, in the Kirk-Killisseh district, is now admitted here. An attempt is made, however, to minimize its importanec by representing it as an unsuccessful Turkish offensive movement, which owed its failure to the circumstance that the detachment encountered the main body of the Bulgarian Army.

The Bulgarians apparently left a covering force in front of Adrianople and attempted to work to the rear to menace the communications with Constantinople. An advance Turkish column commanded by Mahmud Mukhtar Pasha, son of the Grand Vizier, attempted a surprise attack, but, as the enemy was infinitely superior in strength, the attack was not pushed home, and the Turkish troops retired in good order to positions further south.

"In order to check the advance of the Bulgarian army, which had crossed the frontier east of Tunja, and to compel it to extend its front, our eastern army attacked the heads of the enemy's column. The object of this movement was to gain time until the arrival of expected reinforcements. Another attack was delivered against the flank of the Bulgarians, who were compelled to retreat. Thus the Ottoman army successfully caused the enemy to lose time. Afterward it abstained from giving battle to the Bulgarians because the issue would have been doubtful. The Ottoman forces retired in good order in the direction whence the reinforcements are approaching.

"In order to conceal the object of our tactics from the enemy, which was to execute a retreat for the purpose above explained, some of our detachments fought fierce engagements with Bulgarian columns, whose counter-attacks were gloriously withstood, and thus our object was attained."

The Government has commandeered the output of the Heraclea coal mines, the local stocks being low.

It is not clear where the next Bulgarian attack will be delivered, but the next two days should witness a decisive battle. Dispatches from Adrianople report that the second division of the Bulgarian Army crossed the frontier yesterday. Its advance guard encountered serious resistance and suffered heavily, being finally compelled to fall back.

Serious fighting is also reported from Kadikeny, to the South of Mustapha-Pasha. It is stated that the fighting ended in a victory for the Turks.

PALMER HURRIES TO WAR.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—Frederic Palmer, the first American war correspondent to reach Europe from the United States, rushed through Paris this afternoon on his way to the Balkans, where he is to represent THE NEW YORK TIMES during the war of the five nations.

Fresh from the comforts of transatlantic travel, Mr. Palmer was confronted in Paris with his first difficulties, a mere taste of what he will presumably encounter on his hunt for news on an immense field where a million men are fighting a mighty war.

Although with his experience as a veteran war correspondent, Mr. Palmer carried with him a complete camping outfit, saddle, bridle, and all, he was met here with the news that food would have to be carried as well, for, according to the latest reports, each man for himself appears to be the law at present anywhere near the fighting line. Money had also to be changed into gold. This proved one of the hardest tasks, as to obtain enough coins by 5 o'clock in the afternoon was almost an impossibility in Paris, where the scarcity of gold is becoming acute, owing to the international situation. Thanks, however, to the valuable assistance of the manager of the American Express Company, who placed at the disposal of the representative of THE TIMES all the gold available in every till in his office, enough coins were collected to fill a capacious belt.

The help of the friendly Felix Potin was next sought, and a collection of sardines, boxes of canned beef, chocolate, crackers, tea, matches, &c., were soon stuffed in his grip in place of his now useless evening suits.

Meanwhile the travel expert of The Times Information Bureau was busy arranging a schedule of the trains and other means of transportation which would carry Mr. Palmer as swiftly as possible to the centre of operations. It was here that Mr. Palmer's plans were completely upset, owing to the disorganization of the train services from Budapest southward.

The 7:15 Orient Express, which he boarded to-night, will bring him to Budapest to-morrow evening. From there he is likely to have to proceed by slow train to the Servian frontier, and then by any means that is available, military transports, diligence, automobile, horse, &c.

Killing two birds with one stone.

We not only make our boys' suits with as much care as men's—of all-wool fabrics, sewn with silk.

But we cut them with a style that's unusual in boys' clothing.

Norfolk and Double-breasted suits.

Boys' long trouser suits.

WHITRIDGE PRINTS HIS REPLY TO MEN

CALLS DEMAND RIDICULOUS

In Refusing Recognition of the Union Says It Would Seem Like Arbitrating with His Cook.

Frederick W. Whitridge, President of the Third Avenue Railroad Company, introduced yesterday a new and striking feature into the literature of controversies between employers and their employes. Mr. Whitridge had printed and sent broadcast a pamphlet containing a stenographic report of every word a committee of nine street car men said to him at a conference which they had solicited, and every word he said to the nine street car men.

The dialogue began to assume a direct and businesslike tone before any of the usual social preliminaries had been gone through with, and it grew more direct with each exchange of views.

"Are you all here now?" was Mr. Whitridge's first word of greeting.

"All but the international officer," explained Charles Lange, a conductor of the Yonkers line, who was spokesman and intended to press a demand for recognition of the street car men's union, this recognition to be expressed through the admission of the organizer to the conference.

"Do I employ the international officer?" was Mr. Whitridge's reply to the demand for his admission.

"No, Sir," admitted Mr. Lange.

"I do not care to see anybody except men whom I employ," insisted Mr. Whitridge, and that point wast settled for the time.

The nine committeemen, through Mr. Lange, then expressed their desire to have a contract, and narrated their previous efforts to have the General Managers of the Yonkers and Westchester divisions sign such a contract.

"Contract with whom?" put in Mr. Whitridge.

"Why, with you," replied the spokesman for the men.

"But haven't you got a contract now?" urged Mr. Whitridge.

"No."

"By virtue of your employment?"

"No, Sir, there is no contract."

"Well, then, as I understand you, you want to make, instead of the ordinary terms of employment, a written contract with each employe of the system?"

"No, Sir. We want a contract with the association that makes up the employes of the system—the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electrical Railway Employes of America."

The dialogue had progressed to that point rather amicably, but President Whitridge became more aggressive in the next turn to it.

"A pretty large order for you people. You run the railroads of America, do you?" he asked.

"No," replied Mr. Lange. "We are one of the local organizations of that great body."

"Then you belong to some lodge?"

"No."

Mr. Whitridge was rather interested in "Local 490" of the Amalgamated.

"What does that do?" he asked. "How many of my employes belong to that?"

Mr. Lange explained that all of the conductors and motormen on the Yonkers and Westchester lines belonged.

"Are you sure of that?" insisted the President of the company.

"Yes; that is the fact, absolutely," persisted Mr. Lange. The conference moved along then to other matters.

"What," demanded Mr. Whitridge, "does your association do?"

The spokesman explained that it took care of the sick and injured, improved working conditions, fought for agreements as to hours and wages, and provided a decent burial for the dead among its membership.

"How much money have you got in your treasury?" asked Mr. Whitridge.

"About $1,900," explained Mr. Lange.

"And what do you do with it?"

"Defray operating expenses. For instance, the President gets paid for his day while conducting meetings and if a committee is working for the organization, they get paid for the number of hours according to the wages they earn."

"Then you gentlemen," put in Mr. Whitridge, "are now under pay by the Association?"

"Yes,' replied the spokesman, "we are earning our day's wages. We get two dollars and sixty cents for the day."

"And do you pay anybody else except yourselves?"

"No, Sir."

"No outside people?"

"No, Sir."

"This International gentleman, is he paid?"

"Not by us, but the International."

Mr. Whitridge held up a copy of the proposed agreement as to hours and wages.

"Is there anything you want of me besides my signature of this agreement?" he asked.

"No," was the reply. "All we want is your signature."

"I am not in a position to make any such contract as you ask for, at all," he announced, after he had outlined the advantages of a benefit plan he said he was ready to advocate as a substitute, this plan already having been put into operation successfully on the Third Avenue lines.

"The organization which you represent," he continued, "is an irresponsible organization, and from what I have heard of it it is incoherent. I cannot allow you to go away with any misapprehension as to the fact that an agreement with an unincorporated, irresponsible and incoherent organization is one which I, as Superintendent of the affairs of the company, cannot possibly contemplate making at any time.

"When you ask me, in case of differences between any of you and the Superintendent, to go to arbitration, it seems very much like going to my cook and saying: "I want beefsteak for dinner." She says: "You will get lamb chops." I say: "That won't do." She says, "We will arbitrate."

"I will go into partnership with nobody with respect to the administration of this property. If you want to run the road under those conditions, I wish to heaven that the people of Yonkers would raise some money and buy the road. It is for sale. It is not profitable to the system. Why don't you raise some money and buy the road? If you cannot raise the money to buy it, get some people together and make a lease and run your own road. The agreement that you offer me is ridiculous on its face. That is all I have to say, gentlemen."

Mr. Lange insisted on asking a question. It was:

"Then you positively object to arbitration?"

"Arbitration between me and my servants is impossible," insisted Mr. Whitridge.

Mr. Lange attempted to read a list of some important railroad companies that had signed agreements with the International union.

"I do not want to be piggish, but my mind is shut," declared Mr. Whitridge in refusing to hear the list read. "There is no use talking or arguing what some other person has done. If there is anything I can do to promote your welfare I will do it cheerfully, but I am manager of this company and you are my servants and I am the servant of the company. That is all I have to say."

LOOK FOR PUBLIC APPROVAL.

Trolleymen to Tell Their Side of Labor Trouble at Mass Meetings.

Special to The New York Times.

YONKERS, N. Y., Oct. 24.—In a statement issued to-day on behalf of the trolleymen of the Yonkers & Westchester Electric Railways the announcement is made that mass meetings will be held soon to acquaint the public more fully with the men's side of the situation, following the refusal of President Frederick W. Whitridge to grant the employes' demands.

It is said that the trolleymen want to be sure they have public sentiment with them before they quit work.

The statement declares that the men "regret the arbitrary attitude assumed by the management of the company" and says Mr. Whitridge "treated the commission with scant courtesy and ridiculed and insulted the intelligence of the committee."

The statement was made public at the same time that Mr. Whitridge distributed copies of the minutes of his conference with the committee.

TO CUT ST. PETER'S STEPS.

Historic St. Peter's Church on Barclay Street, the oldest Roman Catholic house of worship in this city, is to lose part of its flight of stone steps extending from the porch of the church.

The pastor of the church, the Rt. Rev. James McGean, is at present in the West with Cardinal Farley, but it was learned at the church yesterday that the order to "remove encroachments" had been served upon the church authorities at the same time that similar notice was served upon business men along either side of Barclay Street some months ago and that it had been feared at first that it might be necessary to cut off so much of the stairway that the columns in front of the building might have to be removed. A series of conferences had followed, so it was said, and these resulted in a compromise arrangement, in accordance with which the steps will be cut down enough to permit of the passage of traffic to and fro without much hindrance, yet without disfiguring the edifice.

WOMAN'S WOUNDS HINT AT MURDER PLOT

She Must Have Been Held Upright to Receive Five Bullets in the Same Place.

BUONOMO BURIES VICTIM

He Pawns His Watch to Pay the Undertaker—Sudden Quarrel, He Says, Made Him Slay Her.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Oct. 24.—The body of Jennie Cavalieri, the Chicago woman who was shot in Stratford on Tuesday night during an automobile ride by Joe Buonomo, her discarded suitor, was brought to this city to-day by Louis Richards, an undertaker, and will be buried to-morrow. The expense will be borne by Buonomo, who has pawned his gold watch and all his jewelry for the purpose.

The confessions of Buonomo and the two Italians who were arrested as accomplices—James Mattio and Frank Poligamo—agree in essentials but not in details. Buonomo admits that the Cavalieri woman had been his common-law wife in Chicago since last June, and says that last Saturday when he went home he discovered she had left, taking a lot of his money and clothes with her.

He pawned some other articles and jewelry to get money to follow her to New York, but he says that his pistol had been purchased by the woman when she threatened to shoot him a short time ago. Not finding her in New York, he hurried to this city and he and Frank Poligamo on Tuesday discovered her in a house at the corner of State and Water Streets. That night he took her and four friends on an automobile ride. On the way he got into an argument with the woman, he asserts, and shot her after she had slapped him in the face.

Although the two suspects declare that they know nothing of the intended shooting, the police are of the opinion that the murder was a plot, as others in the car besides Buonomo carried revolvers. The police have, moreover, other evidence to show that all the men in the party had an understanding.

The result of the autopsy made by Medical Examiner W. B. Cogswell will not be made public until Coroner Phelan returns, but it is announced that five bullets entered the woman's head, two in the forehead, one on the left cheek, one in the mouth, and the last in the chin.

Although Buonomo has endeavored to clear his companions of any share in the shooting, the evidence secured so far tends to implicate them. The bullets in the woman's head and neck were what are known as round-nose bullets, but Buonomo's revolver, which he reloaded after the shooting, contained both round and flat-nose bullets. The revolver found in the swamp where the two other men now under arrest were captured, was loaded with flat-nose bullets. The authorities say this shows that Buonomo had been supplied with ammunition by the others to reload.

Despite the statements of Buonomo, the police are continuing their inquiries to determine if the shooting had any connection with the "white slave" traffic. They contend that the circumstances of the crime suggest that there may be something back of it which had not yet been brought out.

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—Jennie Cavagfieri, who was shot near Startford, Conn., by five men, is not the Rose Bruno known to Chicago police, it was declared to-day by Louis H. Quitman, Secretary of the Chicago Protective League for Women.

Quitman told the police he had found the Chicago Rose Bruno and talked with her and was satisfied her identity had been confused with that of the muredred girl.

OSBORNE MADE OFFER TO HARVESTER TRUST

DIDN'T FEAR COMPETITION

Thomas Mott Osborne, political foe of Charles F. Murphy; J. J. Sterrow, recently a candidate for Mayor of Boston, and Col. Edwin D. Metcalf, who was General Manager of the harvester manufacturing business of D. M. Osborne & Co., of Auburn, N. Y., told yesterday, at the hearing in the Government's suit for the dissolution of the International Harvester Company, how the Osborne business was sold to it in 1903.

The testimony showed that the Harvester Company did not seek the absorption of the Osborne Company, which was the largest in the country with the exception of the McCormick and Deering companies, two of the original members of the combination, and that George W. Perkins and his associates refused several times to consider its purchase before they were finally persuaded to take it over at a greatly reduced price. The witnesses also denied that it was fear of the new merger that made them anxious to sell.

Mr. Osborne explained that the business was started by his father in 1857 and incorporated in 1875 and when he died 80 per cent. of the stock was left in equal shares to himself, his mother, and his two sisters, Mrs. Storrow and Mrs. Frederick Harris of Springfield, Mass. Some stock was owned by his uncle, John H. Osborne, and by Col. Metcalf. The business was growing rapidly and as agricultural machinery was sold to farmers on the installment plan, the payments running for three or four years, it was necessary to borrow from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000 during the manufacturing season.

As the amount of indebtedness became larger year by year, Mr. Osborne's mother and sisters, who had to sign all the notes, became more and more desirous of withdrawing their capital. Together the three women owned a majority of the stock. They felt that their opportunity to sell out had come when they learned through the newspapers that the International Harvester Company had been formed. Col. Metcalf, therefore, opened negotiations.

Cordage Sold the Same Way.

"I took no part in them," said Mr. Osborne, "because personally I was not desirous of selling out, though I did not feel that I should try to prevent a sale if one was arranged. During the negotiations I saw Charles Deering and Cyrus H. McCormick at the Waldorf and later Mr. Perkins at the office of J. P. Morgan & Co."

The Columbian Cordage Company, largely owned by the same parties, was sold with the Osborne Company. The plant and business went for $3,200,000 and the payment for machinery on hand or in process of manufacture brought the amount up to about $6,000,000. In payment the Harvester Company gave $1,000,000 in cash and notes secured by the stock of the Osborne Company itself as collateral. A couple of years later this collateral was replaced by notes of farmers, owned by the Harvester Company.

Mr. Osborne said that at no time had he owned any stock or had any interest in the International Harvester Company. He expressed the opinion that the five companies that went into the Harvester Company, with his own, represented 90 per cent. of the production of the country, but on cross-examination by William D. McHugh admitted that this was merely a guess. The Osborne Company sold machinery throughout the United States, and in Europe, South America and Australia. He said the owners had no fear about the successful carrying on of the business after the Harvester Company was formed, but thought it a good opportunity to sell.

Col. Metcalf testified that he first learned of the formation of the Harvester Company through reading of it in a newspaper as he was returning from a vacation in the Summer of 1902.

In Touch With Perkins.

"Knowing how the majority of the stockholders felt," he said, "I came at once to New York and saw Norman B. Ream, whose name had been given in the paper as one of the parties. He had been an agent for the Osborne Company in the old days, selling our machines. I asked him to put me in touch with the powers that be. He said he understood they didn't care to take in any more companies, but I insisted and he took me to see Mr. Perkins, who said he would take the matter under consideration. I went home, but didn't hear from him and finally came down again. Mr. Perkins said he had considered the offer and didn't care to buy us out.

"I thought I would try a different plan. I went to Chicago and saw Charles Deering, whom I knew personally, and while I was with him Harold F. McCormick came in. We went over the situation, and I emphasized our foreign business and our trade in tillage tools, which they didn't make. They rather laughed at some of my arguments, and said the price I asked was too much. This was $5,000,000, added to the value of whatever we had on hand and our bills receivable. I stayed several days, but they wouldn't negotiate.

"I came back and saw Mr. Perkins, and finally arranged for an interview of all the parties concerned. Mr. McCormick, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Osborne, Mr. Harris, and myself met at the Waldorf. I didn't reduce the price I had made all along, but hoped they would make a counter-proposition. Messrs. Perkins, McCormick, and Deering went out and talked it over. When they came back they said they didn't want to buy and would make no counter-proposition. I dropped the matter and prepared to go ahead with our business, as usual. In January, 1903, we needed more money, and I went to see Mr. Storrow in Boston about it. We talked over the futile efforts to sell out, and he said he would call up Mr. Perkins and see if he couldn't get the negotiations reopened. We did so, and the result was that we came to New York.

Conditions of the Sale.

"We reduced the price to $3,200,000. Mr. Perkins said he didn't want the plant even at a bargain, and that we would have to take notes for it. He also refused to buy our bills and accounts receivable or to assume our notes payable.

"We insisted that we should be left in control of the business until we had collected the bulk of the bills receivable and until the Harvester Company should put up better collateral than our own stock. We had about $3,000,000 in bills receivable all over the world, and our experience was that farmers wouldn't pay notes held by a company in liquidation or that had gone out of business."

The Government alleged in its petition that the Harvester Company pretended that the Osborne Company was an independent "in pursuance of its policy, by disguising ownership, to use controlled companies to break down competition and secure for itself the benefit of public sentiment against combinations." This was put in a different light by Col. Metcalf, who said on cross-examination that George W. Perkins objected to keeping the deal secret, but Col. Metcalf insisted that it was necessary in the interests of the Osborne Company, and finally persuaded Mr. Perkins.

"We insisted," he said, "that neither the public nor our own men should know anything about the contract for sale until we had collected our accounts. The advertising manager knew nothing about it. That is why he continued to advertise the company as independent. During those two years it really was independent. We never consulted the Harvester people or anybody else about the business, and continued in competition with them, because if they didn't pay the notes and we had to take our stock back we wanted the business to be in good shape. We collected about $2,000,000 of the $3,000,000 due us from purchasers, but since the sale was announced we have been able to collect only a small part of the balance."

Col. Metcalf was employed as manager of the plant after it became a branch of the Harvester Company for about a year, and since then has been employed in an advisory capacity in reference to the Auburn business.

Mr. Storrow, who is a member of the banking firm of Lee, Higginson & Co., told how he had brought about the negotiations with Mr. Perkins after he had refused to buy the business.

THIS PORT FARES WELL.

Traffic Men Pleased with the Differential Ruling.

While the railroads with terminals at this city have not yet received their notice from the Inter-State Commerce Commission regarding that body's decision in the matter of Atlantic port differentials on import freight traffic, leading traffic officials were convinced yesterday from the abstracts of the new ruling which had appeared in Washington dispatches that New York had fared well in the settlement. They said that Boston had lost the unfair advantage which she sought to gain and that Baltimore had obtained the recognition to which she was fairly entitled.

The new rates are ordered to take effect on the first of the new year, so that any readjustment in the yearly contracts with the steamship lines may be effected at the same time.

The disagreement among the railroads on this business began a few years ago, when the Boston & Maine started a rate war on import traffic by cutting rates under those prevailing out of New York. The New York lines met the reduction, and Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Norfolk became involved. The commission held that rates by way of Boston should be equal to the rates from New York. In a modification of its earlier order the commission now says:

"We are of the opinion that differentials under New York on all-rail and lake-and-rail export shipments from differential territory to Baltimore should not exceed 3 cents per 100 pounds, and to Philadelphia should not exceed 2 cents per 100 pounds, on the classes and on commodities other than grain, flour, and iron articles. On all-rail and lake-and-rail shipments of grain the differentials under New York should not exceed 1.5 cents per 100 pounds to Baltimore and 1 cent per 100 pounds to Philadelphia. On all-rail and lake-and-rail export shipments of flour the differentials under New York should not exceed 2 cents per 100 pounds to Baltimore and 1 cent per 100 pounds to Philadelphia."

Boston still retains her differential on other than standard lines, but the attempt to divert a large share of the ocean freight business now coming to New York to that city has failed. Of this attempt the freight traffic manager of one of the trunk lines entering New York said yesterday:

"The Port of Boston had no reason to look for a differential under New York, and tried to establish one only by main strength. We were sure that when the matter came to be settled by an impartial body that rates would be put back where they were. New York has no reason to complain of the commission's modified order."

ELECT SANTA FE DIRECTORS.

Stockholders Reappoint Four—Number of Holdings Increase.

TOPEKA, Kan., Oct. 24.—At the seventeenth annual meeting of the stockholders of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway, held in Topeka to-day, four Directors of the road—Edwin J. Berwind of New York, John G. McCullough of Vermont, Henry C. Frick of Pittsburgh, and Andrew C. Jobes of Kansas City—were re-elected for a term of four years.

Sixty per cent. of the 2,800,000 shares of the company's stock was represented. It was announced by President Ripley that the Santa Fé now has 31,000 stockholders, a gain of 3,000 over last year.

Steamship Men Dine Mr. Falck.

G. Gustave Falck, manager of the steerage passenger traffic for the Cunard Line, was the guest at a dinner last night at the Café Boulevard, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of his entry into the European steamship business in this city. Three hundred steamship men were at the dinner and the health of the guest of honor was proposed by Congressman Goldfogle.

GET $5,000 IN LOOT IN DAYLIGHT ROBBERY

TAKE BRIDE-ELECT'S GIFTS

Benjamin Nieberg, President of the Lentz Realty Company, which owns the apartment house at 500 West 175th Street, where he makes his home, is wondering how burglars ever managed to invade his apartment and walk off in broad daylight with clothing and silverware to the value of $5,000. Besides the fact that this was the "boss's" apartment that was robbed, his son, Charley Nieberg, is Superintendent of the building, and the thieves not only had to select the hour of the morning of Oct. 14 when his sister, Rose Nieberg, and the maid had gone marketing, but they had to carry out their plunder past the elevator boy, telephone girl, and janitor. The detectives working on the case have not the faintest idea how it was done.

The greatest loser by the transaction was Miss Nieberg, for most of the things taken were hers, and many of them were wedding presents, for the burglary was done at a time when the household was astir with preparations for her marriage to Alfred Bloch. The wedding took place on Sunday, as scheduled, but the beautiful fourteen-piece silver set, gift of Mr. Bloch to his bride, was missing from among the presents, and her brother and nephew had to order new evening clothes, for those that had just come from the tailor, made especially for the wedding, are now probably being worn at the burglars' ball or at some burglarous theatre party.

Took Even Shoes and Pumps.

At 12:45 o'clock on the day of the robbery Miss Nieberg returned from market with the maid to find the door of the apartment jimmied and inside everything at sixes and sevens. Drawers and closets had been emptied. The dining room was stripped of its silver, from carving knife to candelabra. A Persian lamb coat and muff and a mink stole were stolen from Miss Nieberg's bedroom, together with the diamond ring that had been her mother's, and the lavalliere set with twenty-eight diamonds which her brother gave her two years ago. It alone was worth $1,000. It was her custom to leave these jewels in the safe, but her brother had gone down town that morning, and, as she did not know the combination, they had to wait in her dresser till his return. Two fur-lined coats belonging to the men of the household went with the rest, and even such humble things as shoes and pumps were not overlooked.

Most striking of all the features of the Nieberg robbery is its apparent boldness. But it did not equal in that quality the frustrated attempt to rob the home of Harry W. Newington at 323 West 106th Street two days later. The details of both crimes became accessible only yesterday.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon of Oct. 16 none of the family was at home in the big private house that stands in 106th Street just two doors from Riverside Drive. Axel Christianson was rearranging some books in the library and one of the maids was dusting in the sewing room on the fourth floor. It was she who heard the telephone ring, and answered from the extension in the hall. A woman's voice spoke rapidly.

"I am Mrs. So-and-So, who lives across the street," she explained, "and I think that some one is trying to get into the house by the front door."

Without stopping to give thanks, the maid fluttered downstairs, blurted out the news to the butler, and then hung over the banister in vast excitement while he stalked majestically down to the front door. Sure enough, a man was in the vestibule and another stood at the foot of the steps looking up the street.

Asked for "Mr. Stevens."

"Did you ring?" the butler asked.

"We rang three times," was the answer, coolly given.

"Oh," said the butler. "Strange that I did not hear it. There is no Mr. Stevens here."

The door closed then and the men went off up the street. They were men of about 35 years, the butler afterward told the police, and he was sure he could identify them if the police should produce them before his memory faded by too long an interval. The police entered the case when Mrs. Newington returned and found what had happened, and the detectives who came over from the West 100th Street Station found that the visitors had started to force the door. Plain enough on the smooth surface of the snugly fitting oak door were the flattened marks of the jimmy, inserted once six inches above the lock and once less than half of that below.

A less bold but more successful attempt at burglary caused a $1,000 loss to the household of Walter Siegal of 103 West 141st Street two days later. On the afternoon of that date Mrs. Siegal was alone in their apartment on the third floor, and after luncheon she slipped across the hall to chat and sew with her mother-in-law, whose apartment is on the same floor. She returned to her own rooms two hours later to find that her possessions had been depleted by $50 in cash, a fur scarf, a silver bag, a vanity case, and a diamond ring. The elevator man remembered taking a strange man to the third floor, leaving him there, and taking him down a half hour later, when he seemed to be in a great rush.

Mr. Siegal is still fuming at what he calls the inactivity of the police. He notified Headquarters of the robbery immediately, but by Monday no detective had so much as visited the robbed apartment. Then Mr. Siegal made sarcastic inquiries of the Lenox Avenue Station, only to be informed that Detective Dukeshire had been assigned. Where had he been during the four days since the burglary? He had been very, very busy, and besides he had had his eye on the pawnshops.

As thorough a bit of burglary as is often recorded was the job done on Tuesday night in the stock room of Henlein & Greentree, dealers in women's garments, 26 West Twenty-fifth Street. They found every garment gone next morning, and only coat hangers innumerable left behind. Their loss is $2,000.

SULZER SPEAKS AT ALBANY.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 24.—William Sulzer made a whirlwind tour of Albany County's three cities this afternoon and evening. He and Martin H. Glynn, the candidate for Lieutenant Governor, motored from Schenectady to Cohoes after dinner in a heavy rain.

At the spindle city they were met by the local Reception Committee, headed by John F. Scott, Democratic candidate for Mayor, and escorted to the Majestic Theatre, where they received a rousing welcome. The meeting concluded, the party motored to Watervliet, where brief speeches were made and then the journey was continued to Albany City.

Headquarters were established at the Ten Eyck, where Gov. Dix and the local Reception Committee, headed by County Chairman Edwin Corning, received the candidates. The escort to the Harmanus Bleecker Hall, where the mass meeting was held, with its overflow on the lawn in front, consisted of the regular Democratic and the newly formed Sulzer and Glynn Progressive Clubs. The streets were lined with people and the candidates were cheered and applauded as they passed along, the Governor sharing in the reception.

When Gov. Dix and the candidates appeared at the hall the audience rose and cheered lustily, and there were more cheers for the Governor as he stepped forward to speak. The party, he said, had chosen its candidates "wisely and well," and he referred to Gov. Wilson as an "intelligent, farseeing student of public questions." In introducing Mr. Sulzer the Governor said:

"He will bring to the office of Governor a well-equipped mind. He is a man, honorable and honored; a self-made man of integrity, and in every public question where the welfare of the people was involved he has been on the right side."

"No boss owns me," said Mr. Sulzer after expressing his gratification that Gov. Dix had consented to preside at the meeting. "If I ever had a boss I should have been Governor long ago. William Sulzer never had a boss and never will. His only master is the man under his own hat.

"Just stop to consider how ridiculous it is for my friend, Job Hedges, to talk about 'bossism' in the Democratic Party when the Republican Party in the State of New York is shackled to the dictatorship of one of the greatest bosses in American public life, your fellow-townsman, William Barnes, Jr. He bossed the National Republican Convention at Chicago and he is bossing the Republican State campaign now."

HEDGES ANSWERS SULZER.

He Challenges His Rival to Give History of Miller Plantation Co.

John A. Stewart, manager of the Gubernatorial campaign of Job E. Hedges, received last night this telegram from Mr. Hedges, who is at Olean:

> Have just wired Mr. Sulzer as follows: "The public prints inform me that you have made reference to my connection with the corporation known as the Miller Plantation Company of Vera Cruz and that you have warned me not to throw stones.
> "I invite you to tell the history of the Miller Plantation Company and my connection with it. My suggestion to you is that you state facts in connection with it and it will save everybody trouble."

This telegram refers to the retort of Mr. Sulzer to the charges made against him with regard to an Alaskan mining company. He declared that neither Mr. Villard of the Evening Post nor Mr. Hedges were in a position to bring such accusations against him.

"The fight this year for Governor is between Mr. Sulzer and myself," he said. "Mr. Straus cannot be elected because to do so he must secure a majority of the Democratic votes and a majority of the Republican votes. Let the Progressives return home and drive Tammany Hall into permanent retirement."

OLEAN, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Job E. Hedges spoke for forty-five minutes to a large crowd here to-night, and paid his respects to Col. Roosevelt.

"I admired Roosevelt, because when in politics he made people think politics. We agreed that far, but when he told me what to think we parted," he said.

"Roosevelt was the centre of interest for seven and a half years. Then he went to Africa. On his return he thought the country had stood still while he was away, but the great Republican Party had carried the country forward. Now he has organized a Progressive Party to catch up with them."

FINDS GOOD AND BAD MIXED IN NEW YORK

PLAYS AND ETIQUETTE BAD

Sheishu Iwashita, a member of the Japanese Parliament, and one of the foremost business men in Japan, has arrived in New York from Europe. He left Japan a few months ago with the party of Prince Katsura, ex-Premier of the last Japanese Cabinet. The Prince at that time was reported to have been on a secret mission to Russia concerning Russo-Japanese relations in the Far East.

Since he parted from Prince Katsura, Mr. Iwashita said at the Hotel Plaza yesterday, he had been investigating business methods and social problems in Europe.

According to his expressed opinion, the American business methods are the best in the world, and the American people the most enterprising, but he says he is shocked by the social changes that have taken place in New York.

"I have been a business man for more than thirty years," said he. "I have visited Europe three times, and this visit to the United States is my fourth. Business methods in Japan are modeled after American patterns. The Japanese business men have been adopting more American business methods than European in almost all lines of business.

"The Americans see far into the future. When I visited New York a little over thirty years ago Central Park was not in the centre of the city. It sounded strange to call that park by that name, but the man who planned it had realized that the time would come when Central Park would become a centre.

"Wonderful improvements have been made in the hotels in Europe. I asked a hotel manager why such expensive improvements had been needed. He answered me that he had to make them to attract American guests.

"When I look at America from these materialistic points of view, I can only say that America is a wonder. But when I look at its social side I see some things that make me doubt the future of this country.

"When I was here about twenty years ago men gave their seats to women in crowded cars. No one saw a man remaining seated if a woman was standing. But what do you see in the cars now in New York? Many old women stand in the cars while young men are seated. Sometimes these chaps offer their seats to nicely dressed girls, but never to poor looking old women.

"It is said that the Oriental people have to learn from the West to respect women. We know one thing at least that we can teach men in New York. They should be more kind and sympathetic toward old women. You would never see in Japan what you see in the cars in New York—old women standing, while young men are seated, chewing gum. This change surely is not for good.

"Another thing has impressed me. There are some plays here that the public never would have allowed twenty years ago. I have been shocked at some theatres where I have been without having learned about the plays beforehand. I noticed that there was a small audience to see "Hamlet" played by first-class actors and actresses.

"When I think of these changes from good to bad that have taken place in two decades, I cannot help wondering if America or New York at least is not losing religion, while the people here are criticising the peoples of non-Christian countries."

Mr. Iwashita is the President of the Kitahama Bank of Osaka and a Director in many corporations. He also is a member of the Japanese House of Commons.

Efficiency Society to Meet To-night.

The first Fall meeting of the Efficiency Society, of which James G. Cannon, President of the Fourth National Bank, is President, and Henry R. Towne is First Vice President, will be held at the Aldine Club this evening. There will be a round-table discussion on the topic of "The General Manager," and a number of officials of prominent industrial organizations will take part. The society, although only a little more than six months old, already numbers more a thousand members.

SOUTHWEST PROSPEROUS.

B. F. Yoakum Returns Cheerful from a Three Weeks' Trip.

B. F. Yoakum, Chairman of the St. Louis & San Francisco, returned yesterday from a three weeks' trip through Oklahoma and Texas feeling extremely cheerful over the promise of continued prosperity in the Southwest. He said that he had never seen the farmers and business men in that territory so nearly unanimous in their optimism.

"Every section of the country is enjoying a splendid, healthy business, with very good prospects for the future," said Mr. Yoakum. "The people are feeling cheerful over business conditions.

"With the Panama Canal opening for business within the next twelve months, with all the wide-awake Gulf ports getting ready to capture the South American and a portion of the Pacific Coast trade, with the commercial and manufacturing centres of the great basin between the Rocky Mountains and the Alleghanies realizing what this new gateway will mean to the trade of the whole of that territory, and with the vast increased wealth from the expansion of agricultural work, there need be no doubt for the future of that section tributary to our Gulf ports lying between the Alleghany and Rocky Mountains, where 60,000,000 of our population live. It is coming fast to a full realization of its strength."

Motor Reorganization Progressing.

In connection with the announcement yesterday by the Reorganization Committee of the failed United States Motor Company that creditors representing the major part of the company's indebtedness had acceded to the reorganization plan, it was learned yesterday that negotiations were under way to get as President of the reorganized company Walter E. Flanders of the Flanders Motor Company. It is reported that the Flanders Motor Company, which is capitalized at $3,750,000, will be absorbed by the new United States Motor Company through an exchange of stock.

A New Kind of Woman's Page That Every Woman Should Read

We have entered seriously upon the big "business of being a woman." Everything nowadays must be done well and expertly, from making preserves to cleaning up the city. New methods are replacing the old, whether it be in keeping house by the Taylor system or selective marriage.

THE NEW YORK TIMES will reflect the new methods and the new thoughts that make woman to-day a strong note in affairs. Women and men who have made studies of the special subjects presented will write for THE NEW YORK TIMES each Sunday on efficiency, domestic economy, social welfare, politics, eugenics, the care and training of children, and other vital subjects. These articles will be supervised for THE NEW YORK TIMES by an advisory board of women who are in the forefront of woman's work, headed by IDA M. TARBELL, author of "The Business of Being a Woman," and one of the best known of the forcible magazine writers. With her will be associated GRACE H. DODGE, President of the National Y. W. C. HARVARD IN HARD FOOTBALL SCRIMMAGE

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 24.—The Harvard 'Varsity and substitutes and the scrub team played football to-day in earnest after their lay-off from scrimmaging. The scrubs were much better versed in the Brown formations and plays which the regulars are expected to encounter on Saturday, and for an hour the regulars went up against almost everything in the way of attack. The scrubs had some well conceived forward passes which gained considerable ground, Coach Haughton making the second team men repeat these plays constantly until the regulars had mastered a defense. The 'Varsity was too strong for the scrubs, who tried in vain to cross the goal line by use of forward passes, old-fashioned criss-crosses and fake movements. The substitutes watched the scrimmage for half an hour, and then went in against the scrub team themselves.

Right off the reel, however, the scrubs "put one over" on the substitutes. On the first line-up only ten second-team players were near the ball, this fact being unnoticed by the 'Varsity substitutes. Suddenly the ball was thrown away off to the side line to a black jerseyed scrub-team player, who was lying among the blankets, and who timed the ball beautifully, and then ran fifty yards for a touchdown before the substitutes had stopped rubbing their eyes. The signal drill that preceded the scrimmage was long, but the work of the day, which was mainly on defense, was very satisfactory.

Harvard expects that Brown will be able to gain a lo' of ground, and even the most optimistic coaches will not say that Brown will not score. However, Harvard has great faith in its own attack, and will consider two or three touchdowns a good day's work.

The 'Varsity made few attempts to rush the ball, but Felton did some splendid kicking, and Coolidge and Hardwick, who went down the field under the kicks, covered them splendidly. Brickley did some fine drop-kicking in the early practice. He is likely to be a great asset for Harvard in its big games, for his shots, even when made from the middle of the field, are accurate, and he gets the ball away so quickly that it is almost impossible to block his kicks.

TO WORK SECRETLY.

Registration Committee Promises to Hold Closed Session at Next Meeting.

It is promised by Jacob Stumpf, Chairman of the Registration Committee of the Metropolitan Association, A. A. U., that star chamber proceedings will mark the doings of the committee next Monday night at the Dominican Lyceum, when the case of the Tipperary prizes comes up for trial.

When told that there was a strong possibility of one of the officers of the Tipperary Association impugning the amateurism of a well-known athlete, the Chairman asserted that he knew nothing of it, despite the fact that a charge was made in a local paper recently, which publication warrants an inquiry by the committee into the standing of the man accused.

W. L. Powers of the Tipperary Association yesterday stated that the Registration Committee had passed upon the prizes his organization gave at their recent games, and he also inferred that one of the athletes who had won one of the trophies demurred from accepting it, demanding money in its stead.

Up to date the members of the present committee, elected about a month ago, have done what is conceded to have been excellent work, but it is believed that they will stultify themselves if they follow out the scheme of the secret session which is against all the best interests of amateur athletics. The general impression is that if there is a scandal brewing it might as well be cleaned up at the outset as to let it drag along and create dissension.

PENN EXPECTS HARD GAME.

Lafayette Will Present Strong Line-Up To-morrow on Franklin Field.

Pennsylvania will face a hard proposition at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, to-morrow, in Lafayette. The practice of the past week has put the Quakers on edge, and material improvement is expected in their play. Minds, from his halfback position, will direct the plays, while Marshall will fill the position of quarterback. This system has been adopted with success by Yale and other teams. The recent heavy rains have somewhat hampered the coaches, but, barring accidents to-day, Pennsylvania will put into the field the strongest combination possible.

The Lafayette followers are making preparations for the trip to Philadelphia. A special train has been chartered, and a large crowd will go down to Franklin Field. They will be accompanied by the Lafayette Band, which will lead the singing and cheering for the Easton contingent.

Head Coach Dr. Newton has been at Easton all this week, and he will remain until after the game with Pennsylvania, as this is considered one of the most important games on the Lafayette schedule. Though beaten by Brown so badly last Saturday, Lafayette is still anything but confident of taking away the scalp of the Red and Blue.

Fordham Captain in Togs Again.

Capt. Hinchliffe appeared on Fordham Field in football togs yesterday after a week's absence. He took part in the scrimmage, which lasted two full hours and was the hardest of the season. Coach Thorpe banged away at each lineman in turn, showing their faults in charging and in blocking. Later the 'Varsity lined up against the High School of Commerce eleven and showed remarkable improvement over earlier contests with the same team. Commerce took the ball in midfield, but could make no impression on the Maroon line after trying a variety of plays. The schoolboys could not make a first down, while the Fordham backs circled their ends and hit their line for consistent gains and frequently went right through for touchdowns. The scrimmage ended with the whole Commerce squad on the line, making every effort to stop Fordham's advance with the ball in vain.

A few shifts in the Maroon line-up were made by the coaches and a reorganized eleven will face the Norwich University team to-morrow at Fordham Field. Vin Kane, the 'Varsity right tackle, has a badly wrenched knee and will be supplanted by Vic McCarthy, whom Coach Thorpe declares is a "find," and very likely to remain a regular. Full Back Dooling will be out for some time, as he has developed water on the knee. Lou Hayes will replace him.

N. Y. U. Regulars Play in Mud.

Coach Olcott had no respect for the uniforms of the New York University football squad yesterday, and drove the men through a hard scrimmage for over an hour in the deep mud. This was the first real practice that the first eleven has had since the disastrous Wesleyan game last Saturday, and the backs were pounded through again and again in order to overcome their weakness in starting slowly. A new secondary defense for the forward pass was planned by the coach, and considerable time was given to perfecting this scheme. The Williams game on Saturday will be a stiff test for the local aggregation. There is no fear felt for the line, but the back field, made up entirely of new men, is uncertain, and is causing the coaches considerable worry. It plays well on the defensive, but when in possession of the ball seems to forget all the coaching it has had. A long practice period will be held to-day, contrary to custom just before a game, followed by a blackboard talk in the gymnasium to-night. The stormy weather of the week has held the preparation back, and the coaches feel the need of this last day of work.

The line-up yesterday was: Ends, Dutcher and Wheeler; tackles, Vesely and Wiener; guards, Dressler and Mackay; centre, Torrence; quarter back, Huntley; backs, Baldie, Mack, and McDermott.

Michigan Team Starts for Syracuse.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 24.—Twenty-two members of the University of Michigan football squad left Ann Arbor to-night with Coach Yost for Syracuse, N. Y., where they are scheduled to play against the Syracuse University eleven on Saturday. The players are due to arrive at their destination to-morrow morning.

Yale Track to be Rebuilt.

William H. (Sparrow) Robertson has been engaged by the Yale Athletic Association to reconstruct the quarter-mile track at Yale field. When in condition the ellipse is particularly fast, but at present it is asserted that there are two or three inches of superfluous cinders which will not amalgamate with the other materials used in the track construction. The work will be finished in about ten days.

TIGERS' LAST SCRIMMAGE.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 24.—Princeton went into her last scrimmage before the Dartmouth contest on a wet gridiron again to-day, but in twenty minutes managed to roll up a total of seventeen points against the freshmen. Waller featured in the Tigers' attack by skirting the cubs' end for a thirty-yard run and the 'Varsity's first score, and a few minutes later Baker kicked a beautiful drop goal from the thirty-five yard line. De Witt made the last touchdown, following a series of advances through the youngsters' line that tore them asunder.

The Tigers have already put in two days on defensive work and two on offensive tactics this week, and to-morrow will give the first sign of a respite. There was considerable attention paid to the ends to-day and several surprises developed, chief of which was Streit's try-out at the wing berth. Streit has made a strong bid for full back this season, and has only been outclassed because of the presence of such men as Waller and De Witt. T. G. Trenchard, '97, took him under his wing this afternoon with a view to developing another backfield man as end. This is the fourth time this move has been attempted this year, Andrews, Ed. Trenkman, and Stewart Baker being the former experiments.

Andrews is the only man who has retained his position, for to-day Trenkman was supplanted by Goldie Wight, and it now looks as though Wight will have the call against Dartmouth. Streit is built for an end and will doubtless get a chance against Dartmouth, though the real aim of the coaches seems to be to prepare him for the Harvard game. He is a tall, rangy player with lots of snap, and he has fitted in quicker at the end berth than any novice end this Fall. His development would help to solve the difficulties of this position.

A long signal drill on Osborn Field followed the scrimmage work on the freshman gridiron, and the line-up showed several changes that portend the make-up of the Tigers against Dartmouth. "Bush" Dunlap made his first appearance at right end since his injury three weeks ago and pranced around as though he was in good shape. Wight was at the other end, and for the first time this season the two men who faced Yale two years ago were running mates. Capt. Pendleton, who had been subjected to only signal drills this week, appeared at left half back, which necessitated Hobe Baker's return to the side lines, and Ed. Trenkman, after a ten-day rest, appeared at righ tackle. The return of Pendleton and Trenkman gives the Tiger stock a considerable boost.

CORNELL STEADILY IMPROVES

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 24.—In the last hard practice before the game with Bucknell on Saturday the Cornell football team defeated the scrubs by two touchdowns and gave further evidence of the improvement which is being noticed at Alumni Field this week. While the Ithacans are far from form yet, the men are playing better football, and the team seems to be gaining the physical condition necessary to carry it through big games. The defense tightened, and the scrub back field, composed of Trainor, Philippi, Bennet, and Miller, was unable to make much headway.

The day was one of the worst of the year, a hard raining falling and a cold wind chilling spectators and substitutes. Moreover, the ground was very soggy, but this did not retard either team very much.

The 'Varsity back field was stronger than the scrubs' to-day, several of the regulars who played with the second team yesterday being shifted over to the first team. Among them was O'Connor, Cornell's most dependable half back, who played through the scrimmage and appears to be in good condition. He was hurt in the Penn State game, and for a time it was thought the injuries were serious, but they now appear to be of no consequence.

R. B. Whyte, who, toward the end of last season, was one of Cornell's best gaining half backs, played with the 'Varsity for a time to-day. He, too, has been out of condition for weeks, but his work to-day indicated that he was now rapidly getting into form. Rees, whose smashing defensive work yesterday pleased the coaches, was placed at right end on the 'Varsity, and Hill displaced Miller at full back. Capt. Butler and Champaign did not play.

The 'Varsity lined up as follows: Guyer and Rees, ends; Munn and Lahr, tackles; Larrowe and Weidenthal, guards; J. S. Whyte, centre; Smith, quarter back; O'Connor, Whyte, and Hill, half backs, and Hill, full back.

YACHTSMEN IN SESSION.

Amendments to Rules Offered at Meeting of Long Island Association.

At a special meeting of the Yacht Racing Association of Long Island Sound, held last night at the Hotel Astor, at which Stuyvesant Wainwright presided, the question of the proposed amendments to the racing rules were referred to the Executive Committee. They are to put them in proper form and submit them at the next meeting of the association.

An important new amendment to the rules was offered jointly by R. H. Nexson of the Riverside Yacht Club, G. G. Fry, Walter S. Sullivan, and Horace Boucher. It was an amendment to Section 1 of Rule 20, and it provides that in all classes below the "P" class a crew certificate shall be furnished by the owner of a racing yacht to the effect that no assistance of an advisory nature has been rendered by a paid hand during a race, and that yachts not filing a crew certificate shall not figure as having finished in said race in computing yacht racing association championships.

It was also suggested that the yawl class be restricted so that the mainsail shall not be more than 37 per cent. of the sail area, and that the rule relating to old boats shall not be retroactive.

Princeton Not to Drop Lehigh.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 24.—Princeton's athletic authorities were emphatic in their denial to-night that Princeton was contemplating the dropping of any of this year's early season football opponents on the ground that they had not given the Tigers a strong contest. The statement came as a result of a published rumor that Lehigh would be supplanted next Fall by Lafayette.

Dick Barrett Wins on Rollers.

Dick Barrett of Bridgeport won the two-mile amateur handicap roller-skating race last night at the Metropolitan Roller Rink, Fifty-second Street and Broadway, from a field of fourteen starters in the fast time of 6:12 1-5. The winner, with R. Van Duyne of Newark, the Eastern champion, who was second, started from scratch, and these two easily outclassed the remainder of the field. A. Parelia of this city, starting with a handicap of eighty yards, finished third.

Xavier Athletes Compete.

Xavier athletes held their regular members' games last night in the gymnasium of the club house on West Fourteenth Street with some fair competition resulting. The indoor proceedings were followed by a mile and a half road race, in which Eddie Jordan was the scratch man. He conceded marks up to 90 seconds and finally finished fourth after a hard run race. The summary:

Running High Jump, Handicap.—Won by J. Hopper, (6 inches,) with 4 feet 11 inches; F. Danielson, (8 inches,) second, with 4 feet 9 inches; J. Gibbons, (8 inches,) third, with 4 feet 8 inches.

Potato Race, Handicap.—Won by J. Hyland, (1 potato;) J. Coffey, (1 potato,) second; no third.

One-and-One-Half-Mile Road Race, Handicap.—Won by W. Gallagher, (1:20;) J. Dolan, (1:25,) second; J. Faley, (1:25,) third; E. Jordan, (scratch,) fourth. Time—8:25.

WHEELER TO RUN YALE ELEVEN IN NEXT GAME

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 24.—The longest, hardest, and the most satisfactory practice held in a fortnight by the Yale football squad was run off this afternoon. The line smashing, which closed preparations for the Washington and Jefferson game on Saturday, brought practically all the regulars into play for the first time this week. Holladay, Philbin, and Sid York were the only players who did not report. Philbin played through the game at West Point, and it has been decided to let him rest all this week. Meanwhile Pumpelly, who returned to the back field on Tuesday, has been tearing the opposition line to tatters. He has scored practically every touchdown made by the 'Varsity this week, and it is now certain that he will be chosen to start the game on Saturday.

York will hardly be able to play on Saturday. He is suffering from a severe cold. Hugh Harbison, who was moved from tackle last week, has been selected in his place. Randall, the other guard, reported to-day after two weeks' absence, but is still suffering from a muscle bruise.

The coaches have practically decided to use Nate Wheeler in the game on Saturday, allowing him to run the eleven for the first time this season in beginning a match. Wheeler has improved daily since he was made first string selection for the position this week.

Guy Hutchinson was in uniform to-day and took a hand in the quarter back coaching, Ned Glass worked with the guards, and Carl Flanders took the centres in hand. A slight injury to Martyng, second string centre, led the coaches to put Norman Read back to centre, after one day's experience at guard, and chances favor Read's playing part of the game Saturday. Other visiting coaches included Jack Field, Sam Hammond, and Dewitt Cochrane.

Pumpelly's line smashes and "Lefty" Flynn's twisting runs outside tackle were practically irresistible to-day. They registered three scores against the freshmen, who were brought over to oppose the regulars in thirty minutes' play. The class team stood off the 'Varsity, after it had kicked off to the regulars' 10-yard line, for ten minutes before Capt. Spalding smashed through tackle for the score, and Pumpelly kicked goal.

Pumpelly ripped through the rush line for the second touchdown ten minutes later from the 5-yard mark, and Harbison missed goal. Toward the close of the play young Walter Camp tore over the line with the third score. Both Flynn and Camp on kick formations swung free for the open field, dashing 20 yards before they were brought down. The freshmen made only one first down during the afternoon.

A complete second string set of players replaced the regulars the last ten minutes of play, the substitute back field being made up of Loftus, Camp, Baker, and Dietz. Only signal rehearsal will be attempted to-morrow.

The officials were to-night announced for Saturday's game as follows: Referee—J. H. Gillinder, Pennsylvania; umpire—W. N. Morice, Pennsylvania; linesman—F. A. Godcharles, Lafayette.

Best Men Engaged in Amateur Athletic Union Championships.

With the announcement that two championships—the longest in point of distance within the scope of the Amateur Athletic Union—are slated for decision to-morrow at the Eastern Motordrome, Vailsburgh, Newark, fine contests seem assured from a glance at the entries, which embrace the pick of the men at the respective sports of long distance running and walking.

The track on which the events will be decided is a complete circle, four and one-half laps to the mile, and is said to be in its present condition the equal of any in the country for such events.

Each list contains the best of the men in their particular line. Louis Scott of the South Paterson A. C., the ten-mile champion, will make an endeavor to retain his laurels with the prospect that his most determined opposition will materialize from Harry Smith, the junior five-mile title holder, and Gaston Strobino, the lad who was third for America in the Stockholm marathon. The entries follow:

Seven-Mile Walk—R. B. Gifford, McCaddin Lyceum; Al. Voellmeke, Pastime A. C.; Samuel Schwartz, unattached; Benjamin Mann, Glencoe A. C.; John H. Scott, Southwark A. Auto Races on Election Day.

The Motor Dealers' Exhibit Company, an organization composed of New York tradesmen, decided definitely yesterday to hold another race meet at Brighton Beach on Election Day. While it was announced at the track that a meet would be held, certain obstacles arose which were not overcome until yesterday. Sanction for the meet has been applied for from the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association. The various events are now being planned, and the race managers are contemplating giving an excellent racing card of events for the meet. Entry blanks will be issued in a few days. Practically all of the star drivers who competed in the last races have signified their intention of competing on Election Day.

After an unusual struggle, which lasted from 9 o'clock Wednesday night until after 2 o'clock yesterday morning, Jose R. Capablanca defeated Charles Jaffe in the second of their series of match chess games, which was contested at the Tapkaow Club in Morristown, N. J.

GOSHEN, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Rain this afternoon prevented the trotting race that County Clerk James D. McGiffort had arranged between Judge Tompkins's and Judge Seeger's horses. The race will probably take place next Tuesday afternoon.

Columbus Must Pay for Hemphill.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Oct. 24.—The National Baseball Commission to-day dismissed the appeal of the Columbus Club of the American Association from a finding of the National board and directed Columbus to pay Atlanta of the Southern League $1,500 for Player Charles Hemphill, formerly of the New York Americans. Columbus contended that Hemphill was not in good physical condition to play baseball when he was released last season by Atlanta to Columbus, but the commission decided otherwise.

COLLEGE SPORT PROBLEMS.

Successor to Major Pierce to be Elected at Annual Convention.

The seventh annual convention of the National Collegiate Athletic Association will be held at the Hotel Astor Friday, Dec. 27, when sessions will be held morning, afternoon, and evening, at which papers will be read by Prof. W. L. Dudley, Vanderbilt University; Dr. George L. Meylan, Columbia, and others. At the afternoon session there will be reports from the representatives of the various districts, from the standing committees on football rules and officials, track athletics, basket ball rules, the special committees appointed at the last meeting on soccer football, and on amateur law.

The plan initiated last year of holding an evening session for the free and informal discussion of topics of interest will be continued this year. Many problems are engaging the minds of those connected with college athletics, and the discussion of any one of them is likely to be as stimulating and fruitful as the valuable conferences of last year on Summer baseball.

Major Pierce, who has been President since the founding of the organization, has been compelled to resign the office of President on account of orders to join his regiment in China. Prof. Johnston, the Vice President, having died during his term of office, the association will elect successors to these officers.

The association numbers at present 94 colleges, universities, and preparatory schools, with a total enrollment of over 120,000 students. Its growth has been steady and rapid, and it has won an important place in the educational world. The delegates at the conventions are almost all college professors or other members of the teaching staff of the colleges, and the keynote of the association is "Faculty control of college athletics." The influence of the association is directly proportionate to the number of institutions belonging.

Despite a raw day that began with a heavy rain nearly forty women visited the Greenwich Country Club yesterday to take part in a one-day tournament of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association. Miss Louise Graham of North Jersey broke through the ranks that heretofore have been impenetrable to her and took the net prize with a card of 105—12, 93. Miss Georgiana M. Bishop of Brooklawn, formerly a National champion, returned the best score of the day, for her 94 captured the gross prize, and her newly allowed handicap of a stroke placed her in a tie with Miss Graham for the net prize. Miss Bishop, by taking the gross, however, left the net clear for the Paterson girl.

Mrs. M. D. Paterson, President of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association, announced that there will be a one-day tournament at the Montclair Golf Club on Monday. The scores:

James E. Sullivan, Chairman of the Championship Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union, yesterday announced that the National indoor championships would be held at Madison Square Garden on Thursday evening, March 6. Heretofore these championships extended through two evenings, but this year the Championship Committee has decided to eliminate the junior events entirely and only run such senior championship events as have not been decided outdoors during the year, and in that way run them all off in one night.

The list of events this year will include a 75-yard dash, 300-yard run, 600-yard run, 1,000-yard run, two-mile run, two-mile walk, 70-yard high hurdle (3 feet 6 inches,) standing high jump, standing broad jump, three standing jumps, fifty-six pound weight for height, and twenty-four pound shot-put.

Entry blanks for these championships will be issued shortly. Other information can be had by applying to the Chairman of the Championship Committee, James E. Sullivan, 21 Warren Street, New York City.

NEWS FOR BILLIARDISTS.

The first round of elimination was concluded with the two games decided last night in the amateur handicap three-cushion carrom billiard tournament at the Morningside Billiard Academy, 125th Street and Lenox Avenue. In the first game Charles Barnett defeated D. Blank by the score of 16 to 11 in thirty-eight innings. Both contestants were playing at 16 points and the high run of three was made by each. The second contest, between Leo Meyers and William Reade, both scratch players, at 20 points, resulted in a victory for the former after thirty-four innings by the score of 20 to 14. The winner's high run was four and Reade's was three.

Edward Morrison won a close game from John Huking last night in the continuation of the amateur handicap three-cushion carrom billiard tournament at Keeney's Billiard Academy in Brooklyn. Both contestants were playing at 35 points, and the final score was 35 to 34 in favor of Morrison in seventy innings. Huking made the highest run of the game, scoring four to his opponent's three.

The metropolitan handicap billiard tournament at the 18-inch balkline game will be held at Maurice Daly's Billiard Parlors, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway, commencing Monday, Oct. 28. The following players have signified their willingness to play: Fred Poggenberg, Charles Conway, William Gershel, Eric Beck, Willis Thomson, Mark Muldaur, and Arthur Blake. Handicaps will be arranged later by a committee.

Catholic Club to Play Sailors.

On Sunday at Wallace's Ridgewood grounds, Halsey Street and Wyckoff Avenue, the Young Men's Catholic Club, champions of Greater New York, will open their football season with the United States Navy, composed of Annapolis stars. Bill Stallings, Soldier Kearns, Brooklyn's White Hope; Bisson Corcoran, Coffey, and other stars are in the Catholic line-up.

GARDNER VICTOR FOR INTER-STATE TROPHY

Edward W. Gardner of Passaic, N. J., former amateur champion billiard player of America, defeated Ferdinand Poggenburg of the Liederkranz Club, holder of the International billiard title, last night, in the third match for the Inter-State Trophy at the Arion Club, the score being 300 to 254. The winner's average was exactly 10, while the loser managed to net 8 22-29.

Poggenburg played uphill billiards almost from the start, and began to appear like a real contender in his twenty-third inning, when he netted the high run of the match with 75 points, most of which were shots of the hardest possible character. The sphere failed to treat him kindly and rolled safe numerous times, as well as lining up in a provoking manner.

The ultimate winner showed a marked disposition to play safe, and it was generally conceded by the experts that with any sort of "leaves" and an even break in the luck a much closer game would have been the result.

Through their participation in last night's contest the players inaugurated the yearly war with the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players, the officers of which contend that both Gardner and Poggenburg have automatically disqualified themselves from further participation with amateurs. Neither of last night's contestants appeared to worry over the impending trouble, and asserted that it did not concern them in the least.

Gardner won the bank and chose the spot ball, being kissed out of his first attempt, whereupon Poggenburg gathered 5, failing to continue on the miss of a kiss-back from the side rail. His opponent was compelled to play spread billiards to his thirteenth count inclusive, and with the balls in fair control managed to "bang" out 24, stopping upon failure to conect on a rather simple draw.

Poggenburg appeared in a fair way to "roll a few" in his next essay, but he fell down after tallying 17 or a draw, which lacked both direction and speed. In his next attempt the Liederkranz champion netted 15 for a total of 37, against Gardner's 28, but again fell down on a poorly played draw.

In his next session at the table, Gardner gave the onlookers a peep at all sorts of billiards. Driven to extremes on the occasion of what proved his eighth and ninth counts he was compelled to make three cushion shots in each instance, the seeming difficulty of which "brought down the house."

Closely following these and during a run which netted him 62, he got the spheres in the upper end of the table and gave a very acceptable demonstration of balkline playing, with good speed and positiveness. His fiftieth count demanded a pretty drive for position. In his journey toward the end of his run Gardner had many narrow escapes, just making his tallies by the proverbial eyelash, until he dismally failed to pull off a rather wide draw for his sixty-third shot. After a miss by his opponent Gardner essayed a skyrocket drive of a ball from a kiss around the table, which he missed by a wide margin.

In his sixth inning the Passaic man rounded the century mark, running up to a total of 116 before failing to pull off a kiss back. Two misses and a solitary point proved to be Poggenburg's portion in his fourth, fifth, and sixth innings, the balls being left badly and necessitating three-cushion shots, which he invariably failed to bring off.

Gardner amassed 23 in his seventh inning, being compelled to take his seat upon the referee's failure to see a carrom. Poggenburg insisted that the Passaic man continue play if he thought he made the shot, but the latter demurred, stating that he had been given a shot earlier in the game which he hadn't seen, so that it was all even.

Poggenburg thereupon responded with a bevy of 11, which he supplemented in his eighth inning with 19. Gardner scored four zeros from his eighth to his eleventh innings, inclusive. Poggenburg had seeming trouble in getting the spheres to roll kindly. In his thirteenth inning he was playing nice balk only to have the balls line up for his fifteenth shot, a nice single cushion, which he counted, but which spread the balls so that a miss resulted. In gathering ten points in his fourteenth inning Gardner brought off three beautiful single cushions as a starter.

Very ordinary billiards by each was seen until Gardner's nineteenth inning, during which he rounded the 200 mark. His sixth count during this period was a beautiful single cushion all along the side rail. The nineteenth tally in this inning was a massé "a yard long." He was going serenely until a snag in the shape of a three cushion caused him to take his seat after compiling thirty-seven for a total of 208.

Poggenburg came back with a bevy of fourteen, followed by eleven in the next inning, the twentieth, the sixth count of which was a beauty in the shape of a reverse English try along the side rail. In the succeeding inning his best tally was made on a twice-around-the-table play, which brought down the house.

Gardner began operations in the twenty-second inning with a palpable scratch, his cue ball being kissed on after missing on the play as intended. This stage resulted in his netting 22 for a total of 236.

Poggenburg electrified his adherents by amassing the fine total of 75 in his twenty-third inning by dint of hard billiards. A number of the points in the early part of the run were gained mainly by centre-table play of the hardest possible type. As he went on nice line play was the order. The end, however, came when he had to pound out a three-cushion which left the balls practically safe and called out a miss. When he ended his run the tally stood: Gardner, 241; Poggenburg, 221.

Three "goose eggs" in succession marked Gardner's efforts in innings just prior to his rolling up of 39, with spread billiards being the general type of play. He required three more innings in which to reach a victory, the final score being: Gardner, 300; Poggenburg, 254.

Poggenburg, 5 17 15 0 0 1 11 19 0 2 2 5 15 0 4 0 0 0 14 11 8 17 75 0 4 0 7 3 19—254.

Averages—Gardner, 10; Poggenburg, 8 22-29. High runs—Gardner, 62, 39, 37; Poggenburg, 79, 19, 19. Referee—Joseph Dalton.

New Polo A. A. to Open Fall Season.

The Fall season of boxing of the New Polo A. A. will open Friday night, Nov. 1, when forty-two rounds of boxing will be scheduled. The association is one of the oldest in the city. The clubhouse has been renovated and remodeled during the Summer months, with the result that the seating capacity has been materially increased. The club will hold boxing bouts on Friday nights.

Cornell on Harvard Schedule.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 24.—Cornell will be substituted for Dartmouth in Harvard's track schedule, according to the action of the Harvard Athletic Committee to-night. The Track Committee was authorized to make a two years' agreement with Cornell. It was announced that the first dual track meet would be held in Cambridge next Spring, and that the next meet would go to Ithaca. Dean Le Baron R. Briggs was chosen Chairman of the Athletic Committee.

YACHT RACE TO PORTO RICO.

Every indication points to an ocean yacht race to Porto Rico next Summer. John L. Gay, a prominent yachtsman of San Juan, P. R., has been here for the past few weeks, and has seen several well-known Brooklyn yachtsmen in connection with a race to San Juan next Summer. While nothing definite has been done in the matter, the affair has progressed so far that the Bensonhurst Yacht Club is willing to undertake the management at this end, and is confident that the contest will be the most important fixture of the season of 1913.

Several unusual features appear in connection with the race. The first prize will be offered by the Military Governor of Porto Rico, and another will be offered by the members of the Porto Rico Legislature. The contest will be semi-official and will have the sanction of not only the insular government of Porto Rico, but also of Washington.

Being a race that promises to be of National importance, the Bensonhurst Yacht Club will in all probability ask the co-operation of several other yacht clubs. A special committee will be formed that will be made up of the Chairmen of the Regatta Committees of the Bensonhurst, the Atlantic, and the Larchmont Yacht Clubs, with possibly a representative of both the army and the navy. This board will have full charge of the race. The committee will be appointed shortly and will at once commence work.

The starting line will be off Westlawn, the new home of the Bensonhurst Yacht Club, on Gravesend Bay, and the finish line will be off the Exposition Grounds in San Juan. The course will be about fourteen hundred miles. It will be the longest ocean race that has been held from New York since the transatlantic contest for the German Emperor's Cup. The contest will be for schooners only.

HARBURGER WANTS CREDIT.

Sheriff Harburger evidently takes exception to the statements of Billy Joh, the referee of the Stewart-Smith bout, that he (Joh) stopped the bout before its natural termination, and in this respect the Sheriff has given out his letter to Gov. Dix on the subject. The letter:

> I was present on Monday evening, Oct. 21, at the boxing contests held at the Garden Athletic Club. One of the bouts, that between Jim Stewart and "Gunboat Smith," was stopped by me because of the brutal and unequal contest between the men.
> The newspapers of to-day state that the Boxing Commission met yesterday and called before them Referee Joh, who refereed the bout in question. He testified that he stopped the bout before I climbed through the ropes. That is an utter untruth. The fact is, that at the end of the seventh round I entered the ring and examined Stewart, one of the contestants, and ascertained from such examination that the said Stewart was in a comatose state and physically so weakened that he was in no condition to continue. The referee was in his corner expecting the bout to go on. When the eighth round was about to commence, Stewart, tottering and unable to stand on his feet, started to go toward Smith, the other contestant, but was unable to do so because of his weakened condition. The referee did not interfere, and I thereupon stopped the bout because it was a fight, and was most brutal in its nature.
> After the completion of the bouts, Stewart was brought into the ring to show that he was a fit person to continue the bout. I told him that he was then in such a weakened condition mentally and physically that many in the large crowd had not only noticed it, but had informed me that he faltered on his way while he was returning to his room and that he was absolutely unfit to continue boxing. Every subterfuge was used by the management to endeavor to show the public that I was wrong in stopping the bout, but I know that I was absolutely right and will not allow any one to turn right into wrong.
> The Boxing Commission and the boxing club have now evidently tried to befog the true state of affairs, and have tried to make it appear that they interfered and not I. Their position is an unwarranted one, and as chief peace officer of this county I will uphold the spirit of the law as so thoroughly enunciated by you to me, and intend to see that the law is not violated.

Small Party Follows the Hounds.

WESTBURY, N. Y., Oct. 24.—The meeting place of the Meadow Brook hounds to-day was at Wheatly Pond with a small following, although it was ladies' day. The muddy condition of the roads did not prove attractive to lovers of hunting. The hounds were laid on at the E. D. Morgan estate and ran west to the Osgood Pell place, then crossed the Roslyn and Brookville Turnpike, where C. Parks had a fall, but remounted quickly and came on with the rest. The hounds recrossed the turnpike and checked, but were soon laid on again, running south to Whitney's dairy, north to Valley Land Company, turning north again to Glenhead school house, where they finished. Among those following were Miss Fleischman, Miss Ladenberg, the Misses Hitchcock, Mr. Phipps, Mr. Parks, and Mr. Livermore.

New York A. C. Golf Next Month.

After having practically decided to let this year's tournament go by default, the Tournament Committee of the New York Athletic Club, consisting of H. C. Richard, P. W. Pogson, J. D. Foot, J. G. Batterson, and A. H. Pogson, has arranged to hold its second annual tournament over the links of the Fox Hills Golf Club on Nov. 7, 8, and 9. Ernest F. Harbold, Vice President of the New York A. C., appointed the committee. In addition to the championship division there will be two other sixteens, making three in all, with prizes for the runner-up and beaten eights; also a gold medal for the low score in the testing round.

The new Nominating Committee of the Metropolitan Golf Association consists of Charles B. Macdonald, Chairman; Herbert L. Pratt, and R. H. Williams, Jr. They were appointed at a recent executive session of the association. The duties of the nominating committeemen will be to nominate officers and the Executive Committee of the M. G. A. for the year 1913.

JACK BRITTON WINS BOUT WITH DUFFY

Jack Britton of Chicago outpointed Freddie Duffy of Boston over the ten-round route in the feature bout at the Forty-fourth Street Sporting Club last night without making an unusual showing as a clever boxer. The Chicagoan missed his swings from start to finish, sometimes by the margin of a foot or two. But he showed more cleverness than Duffy, who relied mostly on a long left swing and at the finish Britton led on points with plenty to spare. Britton weighed 139¾ pounds, and Duffy was one-half pound below this figure.

The show was the second of the "banjo front" club, but none of the spectators showing any full dress last night. Even Knockout Brown, who led the array a week ago, was dressed informally for last night's bouts. The English method of having the referee outside the ropes worked very well, in fact much better than is generally the case with the official inside the ropes. The boxers in all the bouts showed no inclination to clinch and the referee's instructions were always obeyed promptly. A fair-sized crowd witnessed the show.

Duffy got over a few hard slaps to Britton's head, and these proved the signal for the Chicagoan to slow up. He showed no disposition at any time to go in and exchange punches with the Boston boy, and in overcautiousness on defense did much to make the bout appear slow. Britton was generally on his way back when he got over a punch, and on a few occasions, when he jarred Duffy with a hard punch, he was slow to follow up his advantage, evidently fearing that Duffy would get over a swing as he rushed in. In the last round it seemed that Duffy was due for a knockdown or a knockout, but Britton, when his chance for a decisive ending was best, was unable to hit his opponent. He missed almost a dozen hard swings in succession in the closing round.

Several times Britton backed away under the shower of Duffy's blows in a manner that indicated he was hurt and trying to cover up. This was especially true in the fifth round, when Duffy had the Chicagoan backing around the ring under his rapid-fire blows. Early in the sixth Duffy shot over a hard right to Britton's jaw, and the punch upset Jack, but he saved himself from falling by putting his hand on the floor. Excepting the flash that Duffy showed during this stage of the bout he was outboxed. He danced around the ring at a clip that made him hard to reach, and by shooting in occasional left hooks he bothered Britton considerably.

Jim Savage got his chance to "come back" in the six-round semi-final and he made the most of his opportunity by finishing the bout in a round. His victory was not an impressive one, however, as his opponent did not act like a seasoned boxer. Savage was matched to oppose one "Fighting" Jack Keating of North Dakota, but Keating failed to put in an appearance. A substitute named McKenna was put on in Keating's place. He was outweighed by about twenty pounds and was no match for Savage, who can box like a champion when not hard pressed. Savage tore after McKenna as soon as they had shaken hands and there was no let-up until he had McKenna down and so completely outclassed that Referee Young Corbett waved both men to their corners. McKenna protested to the referee that he was able to continue and then showed how dazed he was when he tried to find his corner and could not.

In another six-round bout Tommy Hudson of Windsor, Ont., stopped another Canadian bantamweight, Johnny McCracken of Toronto, in the fifth round. At the start both boys put up a strong bout, but Hudson gradually began to wear down his opponent and after sending him to the floor in the fifth round the referee stopped the bout.

DEMOCRATIC TARIFF REFORM.

Can the Democrats, if they gain control of the National Government, do the mischief with their tariff measures that Mr. TAFT says they will? Here is a question to which the President—or the Presidential candidate—seems to have shut his eyes. Not that the Democrats would do mischief if they could. There is no proof of that and no likelihood. It is easy to repeat the parrot cry which in the past has had a good deal of effect, but there is nothing to back it. The character and ability of Gov. WILSON will, if he be elected, be as good a guarantee of sane and careful action as Mr. TAFT could possibly give. Considering the sad weakening of Mr. TAFT in the past six months, there are those who think Gov. WILSON'S conservative influence is a much more trustworthy force than Mr. TAFT'S. We are among them.

But set aside the question of what the Democrats would do if they could; what mischief can they do? They have declared for the principle of a tariff for revenue. It does not seem to occur to Mr. TAFT that that must mean revenue by means of a tariff. At present we get, roughly, about one-half of our revenue from taxes on imports. We could with advantage get even more. But at the present rate, with $300,000,000 to $350,000,000 of import taxes, we are not in any danger of reaching "free trade"—the bogy with which Mr. TAFT and the campaign scribblers would scare us. Of course, some taxes will be reduced in order to permit imports. These would naturally begin with the burdens now laid on materials of manufacture. Some of these now are simply prohibitory. Some are so high as to increase the cost of manufacture in this country. Their reduction with the imports that would follow would not hurt our industries. It would help them. Especially labor would not be hurt; it would rather be aided, for less money would be required for materials and more would be free to compete for labor.

In the same way duties would be reduced, as nearly as can be calculated, to a revenue basis on the necessaries of life, on food and food products, and on things that enter into clothing, shelter, and transportation. In this field of tariff operation the cost to the consumer is great and very oppressive. Every dollar of reduction in the price of such necessaries is equivalent to an increase in wages or income. Real wages are the things the wages will buy. Add to these and you add to wages. Thus it is plain that a revenue tariff or the nearest practicable approach to it along these lines is nothing to be afraid of. It is something to work for and vote for.

No one is foolish enough to think that under the Democratic Party these lines will be strictly followed. In planning a tariff for revenue a large measure of protection will remain, some will be proper and unavoidable, and some will be sneaked in as it always is. There are too many Democrats who are interested in protected industries to leave any hope that this will not be so. The record is there to prove it. The three "Senators from Havemeyer," for example, in CLEVELAND'S second term were Democrats. But this is a fact that Mr. TAFT and his aids like to forget. Whatever we may think of its ethics, it is a fact that shows how little radical change is to be expected from the Democrats if they win.

But the "agitation," the "disturbance," the "uncertainty" that will ensue if the Democrats are turned loose in Washington! This is wearisome nonsense. In the first place any victorious party this year will be made up of a large plurality, probably a large majority, of the voters of the country. If that is not a guarantee of the safety of the country, then there is none. We believe that it is. In the dark Summer of 1896, when Wall Street shivered with dread of Mr. BRYAN and THE TIMES was opposing his election with all earnestness, we never doubted that the Republic would survive such an election and deal sanely in the long run with the problems it would raise. No great party of American voters is going to ruin the Nation, and only a blind, scared partisan would think that it is. In the second place there is but one way to stop agitation of the tariff—reform and reduce the tariff. The tariff is outgrown, clumsy, oppressive, unfair, and costly, and the great mass of voters know it. It cannot be kept on indefinitely. The Republicans won't reform it—the attempt to deal with it has split the party wide open. The Democrats will at least move in the right direction. They may do much good; they will not do harm.

THE CASE OF MAUD MALONE.

Chief Magistrate KEMPNER of Brooklyn clearly interpreted the law and also expressed public sentiment when he declared that MAUD MALONE'S course has been that of "a willful and malicious disturber and lawbreaker." No citizen has the right to interrupt a public meeting. Questions are sometimes put to political speakers by men in their audiences, but the speaker is never compelled to answer them, and if the questioners persist their persistence becomes a disturbance and they are expelled. Miss MALONE'S object is to create public interest in woman suffrage. Her method tends only to create opposition to it. Woman suffrage is not an issue in Gov. WILSON'S campaign for the Presidency.

The vast audience in the Brooklyn Academy of Music last Saturday night had assembled to hear Gov. WILSON speak on the issues of the campaign. Miss MALONE impudently interrupted his speech, persisted with her irrelevant questioning in spite of the candidate's courteous treatment of her, and caused wrathful protests from all over the house. She was arrested, and has been held for trial, properly, by the Magistrate on a charge of breaking the peace. All woman suffragists who thus defy law and public decency should be promptly punished. We must not follow the foolish example of Great Britain in dealing with female lawbreakers.

THE BECKER VERDICT.

After long deliberation the jury in the Becker case returned at midnight a verdict of guilty. It has been a fair trial. While the District Attorney and his assistant made the best of the testimony at their command, the prisoner has been defended with remarkable skill and ingenuity. The jury was made up of citizens of an unusually high type of intelligence. The charge of Justice GOFF was direct, coherent, and left much to the intelligence of the jury. The case has not been prejudiced by public opinion or popular clamor. On every side there has been ample evidence that the people have viewed this matter impartially and with open minds. Yet the jury has found this Police Lieutenant guilty of murder in the first degree.

The verdict leaves the Police Department of this city in a shameful position. The time has come now for a vigorous and fearless investigation of that branch of the city government, for a thorough overhauling of it. The result of the Becker trial, reached without undue haste, and with all the dignity of the law, tends to confirm the worst reports regarding it, and if the Mayor does not now take prompt action to reform the police the people must take up the work for themselves.

TAX BENEFITS AND BURDENS.

There can be no doubt of the benefits supplied by taxation, even though a question be raised whether the same money ought not to supply greater benefits. The burdens are less thought about, but the facts reported by Controller PRENDERGAST in his annual requisition for supplies challenge attention. The annual city debt service is now just a trifle short of $55,000,000. The year's increase is something over $3,000,000, or over 6 per cent. Large as the figures are, they are smaller than the average since consolidation, for since 1898 the aggregate debt has grown from $325,000,000 to more than a billion. It is true that the city carries sinking funds of $284,000,000, which will pay off the principal some decades hence, but the sinking funds do not relieve the intervening generation, which must pay both interest and amortization charges. The city's population has grown wonderfully, which makes even more wonderful the growth of the debt from $100 per capita in 1898 to $200 now. The annual cost per capita has grown faster yet, or from $4 per capita to $16. The city is now paying 30 per cent. of its budget on account of its debt. A man ought not to pay that proportion of his income for rent, but the city has it to pay before it begins to pay its living expenses.

The figures for the Nation are not less surprising. The Wall Street Journal has recently compiled the expenditures for all States, and finds that they have increased within ten years from $189,105,172 to $423,170,000. To this total it is necessary to add the expenditures of the Federal Government. Even yet the almost incomprehensible aggregate is not complete. City, county, and State expenditures move in close relation, the rate of growth being rather greater if anything for the smaller divisions. Assuming only the same rate of growth that The Wall Street Journal has established in the case of States by original and official information it follows that over $2,000,000,000 of taxes are being raised and spent yearly.

It would seem that here are facts to throw light upon the increase in the cost of living. Why should not prices rise when there is all that money being spent? The expenditure of those billions has created a demand for commodities which is out of relation to all ordinary considerations of supply and demand. It is inconceivable that anything whatever should bankrupt the taxing power of Americans. There is no reason, therefore, why the various Governmental divisions should not borrow and spend as much as they like. A man, a firm, a corporation has to keep a sixpence on the credit side of the balance sheet, or invite the dreadful consequences so feelingly described by Mr. Mantalini. But no city dreams of setting up ledger accounts with the public utilities floated on tax money. Nobody was ever mad enough to suggest such a thing for Uncle Sam. Those who suggest even that the half billion dollar canal with which he has just provided himself ought to earn interest and upkeep are thought to be rather mean, and blind to the benefits which would flow from giving its use gratis to the first askers. We are indeed in a new era when old figures do not count and ordinary considerations of solvency go for nothing. Be it remarked that the moneys which are being spent so lavishly are not from income, as the Panama Canal for the most part was built, and as the railways of the United States used to finance their extensions. These figures which tax the imagination correspond merely to the burden of debt. This is a rather drab subject. Nobody in particular can be expected to pay any attention to it. Probably it's of no consequence anyway. We are never likely to return to the days when money had to be earned before it was spent.

CAMPAIGN PERSONALITIES.

The futility and unwisdom of attacks upon personal character in a political campaign are well illustrated in the difference that has arisen between Mr. VILLARD of The Evening Post and Mr. SULZER, the Democratic candidate for Governor. The Evening Post printed a mining story about Mr. SULZER the other day. The gist of it was that during a trip to Alaska Mr. SULZER had permitted himself to be beguiled into dalliance with mines by one GOULD, who, in the intervals of his missionary labors among the Chilkats and the Tlinkits, was driving a roaring trade in mining shares. On examination and analysis The Evening Post's charges against Mr. SULZER fade away to nothingness. He may have lost some of his own money—members of Congress who go into mining ventures with roving missionaries usually do lose money, we suppose—but it does not appear that he deprived anybody else of his money, or that he was guilty of any wrongful act. In short, the mining story was a "roorback."

Mr. SULZER in his speech made a prompt denial of the accusations. There he ought to have stopped. But, unwisely yielding to impulses of resentment, he pitched into Mr. VILLARD, alleging that some of that gentleman's relatives had brought charges against him of mismanagement of their joint estate. This was quite untrue, there was no basis for it. Mr. SULZER ought never to have mentioned the matter, not only because there was no basis for his charge, but because it was not germane to his campaign. Even if Mr. SULZER should charge and prove that Mr. VILLARD was actually the man who fired the Ephesian Dome, he would not thereby establish his own fitness to be Governor of New York. Mr. SULZER is running for office, Mr. VILLARD is not. It is right, proper, and salutary that a candidate for office should come under examination, to the end that an enlightened electorate may not make an unwise choice. But a candidate under criticism does not and can not help his case by retorting upon his assailant with counter-charges, unless his assailant happens to be also the opposition candidate.

The effect of personal attacks in a political campaign is much overestimated. Only in rare cases do they influence votes. In 1876 the Republican press unmercifully belabored Mr. TILDEN, but the voters of New York gave him a very large majority. Mr. SULZER has nothing to fear from personal attacks. He has been many years in public life, he is known to be an honest man. An exchange of courteous apologies between the parties to this controversy would seem to be indicated.

DEFECTIVES IN THE SCHOOLS.

It was not merely against the appointment of two physicians for the examination of mentally defective children in the schools, of an Assistant Inspector of ungraded classes, and of a "social worker," that Mr. ARTHUR SOMERS protested—and in vain—at the meeting Wednesday of the Board of Education. These appointments are the entering wedge for the establishment of a central school for imbecile and "backward" children recommended by Dr. GODDARD, who lately completed a special inquiry into this matter. Shall the schools of this city try to educate feeble-minded children? It is in this class that minds like SCHRANK'S are developed. In such a school they would be under surveillance possibly six hours daily—they would be free and unguarded during the rest of the twenty-four.

The public schools were opened on Sept. 9 with 81,000 children on part time. Mr. SOMERS in his protest made the point that the 142 classes containing 2,200 feeble-minded and otherwise defective and backward children were taking the full time of teachers who might be employed in instructing at least 15,600 children of normal mentality. Does it pay to deprive of instruction so many pupils who are qualified to receive it and to become useful members of the community for the sake of defectives who, no matter how much they are trained, will always be a burden upon the community?

Is not their treatment a matter for the hospitals and the psychiatric clinics, rather than for the schools? Dr. GODDARD will admit, we believe, that 99 per cent. of mentally defective children are incurable. The Department of Public Charities has within the last week proposed to open a clearing house to which suspected pupils might be referred for examination under competent specialists. Those found defective should be segregated in existing hospitals and asylums, or in institutions created for the purpose, where they might be under constant and careful supervision. This seems to be the more sensible procedure.

IF THE WAITERS STRIKE.

There will be time, before the threatened strike of the waiters on Nov. 1, for the hotels and restaurants to prepare to accommodate their customers, modestly, yet profitably, without any extensive service by waiters. People must eat. Buffet lunches can be set out, with restricted but satisfying bills of fare, and, with the help of only a few servants, the public appetite may still be comfortably appeased. A similar plan can be followed at dinner time. There will be some public discomfort, but not nearly as much as might be caused by trying to keep up present arrangements with a few incompetent waiters.

We are confident that the customers would find a novel enjoyment in the change. They might eat less, and their bills would be smaller, but the caterers would be saving the waiters' wages. There was some talk last Spring of trying to meet the difficulty in this simple way, but the employers were taken by surprise then. They have had ample warning now, and they ought to prepare themselves. There is no quicker way to end a strike than to convince the strikers that their services can easily be spared.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Saved, Though the Price Was Dreadful.

It was with well—or cruelly—mingled emotions that one read yesterday the London dispatch telling how a most painful and dangerous situation involving a royal personage was saved. The royal personage, it seems, was King GEORGE, and he had been invited to a luncheon by one of his devoted subjects, who is the fortunate owner of a country house in Berkshire, where the Great can be worthily entertained. The King had graciously accepted the invitation and with the other guests was about to take his place at table when somebody with a more mathematical eye and a mind better adjusted to high responsibility than the careless host possessed, saw that the company numbered just thirteen!

Fortunately they were not yet seated when this truly horrifying discovery was made. Instant action could be taken, and was. Of course minor proprieties were ignored, or at least disregarded, in the presence of a peril like this. The safety of the British Empire was threatened. The realization of that fact, though sudden, was complete, and without a moment's hesitation the estate agent was called in from near-by obscurity, and to him—one can imagine his humble pride—was accorded the happy privilege of being the necessary fourteenth.

The expedient was indeed desperate, but so was the situation. The alternative to letting the estate agent eat with his betters was the exclusion of one of those betters, and that would have necessitated a selection so invidious as to be almost as intolerable as letting the King be one of thirteen. In other and nobler times, when Kings had freer hands than now, something of the cruel embarrassment that remained could have been removed by a word that raised the plebeian retainer to a rank befitting his service, but to have done so in this age would have excited the criticism of the irreverent.

Never mind. The important thing is that the King was rescued from a deadly peril, and realization of that momentous fact leaves little room for regret that social barriers upon which so much depends were broken down. The cost was great, but it was worth paying. Thirteen at table would have meant that one of the thirteen would die before the year was up. To make the King share a doom no more finely divided than that differed not much from high treason, and it is pardonable, if at all, only because evil intention was—at least for all except the unduly suspicious—obviously absent.

Another Avoidable Accident.

What is at the moment of writing the latest fatal accident to an aviator—that in Alabama, of which LOUIS MITCHELL was the victim—seems to have resulted, like so many of its predecessors, from a combination of two causes, both avoidable.

MITCHELL, in order to amuse and thrill a great crowd of paying spectators, was making a "spiral glide" downward from a great elevation. Another aviator, who was observing the operation from above, says that something happened to MITCHELL'S machine—that it seemed to go to pieces and the planes tilted so that he could see the ground between them. The conjunction of these two statements is not easy to understand, because a tilting of the whole machine such as might have followed loss of control of it would have made the ground so visible to such an observer, but apparently the machine did more or less break up under the strains to which the spiral glide subjected it.

Whether its demolition caused or was caused by the loss of control, the evidence of faulty construction and inadequate strength remains. Probably MITCHELL would still be alive had he not attempted a feat involving dangers not incidental to the right and sensible kind of flying; probably with a better-built machine he could have made his startling descent in safety, or at least in what passes as such in aviation. The lessons of the accident are plain. While they are not heeded the lengthening of the dreadful list of dead aviators will continue.

MRS. RHINELANDER'S ESTATE.

St. Luke's Hospital received $69,288 under the will of Mrs. Matilda T. Rhinelander, wife of Charles E. Rhinelander, of 18 West Forty-eighth Street, and an aunt of Police Commissioner Waldo. The will accompanied the report of an appraisal of her estate, filed in the transfer tax office of the Surrogates' Court, yesterday by Deputy State Controller Wallace S. Fraser. This showed that the total valuation placed on Mrs. Rhinelander's property was $445,406, but deductions for debts, commissions, and administration expenses reduced the net estate to $429,427. Mrs. Rhinelander died on Jan. 12 last.

The schedules in the report revealed the fact that Mrs. Rhinelander's estate consisted entirely of personalty. This was invested in stocks and bonds of business concerns and railroads. Mrs. Rhinelander was a beneficiary of one-third the residuary estate of her sister, Mrs. Charlotte August Swords, wife of the late Gen. Thomas Swords, U. S. A. The amount which is still due to the Rhinelander estate is $18,276.50. Mrs. Rhinelander bequeathed the bulk of her estate to her husband, and left a small amount to two nieces.

"KNOW THYSELF."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If there is anything that men and women thoroughly misunderstand it is their own selves. As individuals we lack self-acquaintance and need introduction. Then, if any sense of humor remains, we should laugh ourselves to death at our own absurdities. "Faithful the wounds of a friend, but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful." We are our own enemies in the respect of kissing ourselves into the belief of possession of excellencies that "ain't so." Then we get mad at kind and courageous friends who point out our deficiencies in sweet unconsciousness of their own.

The moral philosophers for ages have declaimed against human delinquencies until reiteration has reached the platitudinous stage. We fervently concur, each assuming that the criticism is especially applicable to our friends or the mass, and our hearts turn joyous somersaults in confidence of exemption from the strictures. We love particularly to see the opposite sex under mauling, and would gladly welcome a nondescript sort of a third sex on which to commit a common assault. We are constituted as are the people composing the crowd in the street, who ask each other in astonishment and indignation, "Why doesn't some one call a policeman?" when such a personage seems needed; or the sign post constantly pointing out a direction toward which it never moves itself. Generations yet unborn are laughing at our follies, which they will probably adopt themselves in the manner of their predecessors. SELF-IGNORANCE.

DEMOCRATS AND SOCIALISTS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My attention has been called to a statement issued by the Democratic Chamber of Horrors exhibit in which they say that out of $20,600,000,000 of manufactured products in this Nation the wage earners received only a fraction over 16 per cent. This statement is now being used by every Socialist in New York City and elsewhere, and is simply one of those half truths which are worse than a whole lie.

The Democratic "statistician" failed to include 790,000 salaried workers who received $938,575,000 in wages or salaries for the census year. He has ignored entirely all of the other costs, such as raw material, which amounts to over $12,000,000,000, miscellaneous expenses amounting to almost $2,000,000,000, making a total of expense in the manufactured industry of considerably more than $18,000,000,000, leaving a profit, or income, for the manufacturer of a little over $2,000,000,000, as against more than $4,000,000,000 paid to labor. This is the kind of idiocy that the Democratic statesmen are trying to inflict upon the wage earners of this Nation. It is purely and simply a Socialistic statement, without any foundation of fact, and a gross misstatement of our manufacturing industry and of the conditions under which it is prosecuted.

TIME TO PROTEST.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Through a Marconi wireless to THE TIMES from London I am astonished and really enraged to learn that diamonds have again advanced, this time 15 per cent., in cost. One after another the commodities of life increase in price until we seem to have reached the apex of high cost of living. No rational excuse can be offered for this last increase. Diamonds are as plentiful as ever, or more so. It is in a pure spirit of benevolence that I protest. I have none of my own that I can remember, but to many poor people they are indispensable as articles of comfort in toilet. When in the cars I love to have them displayed before me by tinsmiths, stenographers, doorkeepers, plumbers, fish dealers, icemen, and the wealthy classes generally. Lustrous diamonds are acknowledged as suitable accompaniments to blue-black crescent ends of finger nails, tobacco decorated shirts, or turkey-clawed or ham-shaped hands. Their scintillations blind us to the other minor and genial defects.

Are our pawnbrokers to be driven out of business? Cannot an international something be arranged to restrain further advance in protection to suffering humanity?

OBLIGINGLY TREATED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have frequently requested at the Public Library books which were seldom in general use, have often asked for many books at a time, and have had a reader's and researcher's experience in several of the different rooms or departments. Yet I have never met with anything but obliging treatment on the part of any of the library employes. In the few instances when I have received a book which I did not ask for—out of the hundreds of instances when I have promptly received the book I did ask for—complaint to the librarian in charge has brought speedy remedy of the mistake, which, in some cases, has turned out to be my own inaccuracy in filling out the call slip.

The librarians in charge of the reference shelves have always, when I have asked them to do so, searched about patiently to help me get information on any given subject, and it seems to me that they take an almost unaccountably courteous interest in helping readers find the books they want. The task must sometimes pall. FRANCES COWLES.

Loti Poses?

One observes that Loti, the Silent, is speaking: that Loti, the Aesthetic, who takes no interest in modernism, is writing his impressions of New York, which he dislikes; that Loti, the Recluse, announces his leasing of "an old Turkish mansion under the shade of the great tomb of the Sultan Achmet," and one concludes that Loti, the Sphinx, has a secret of his own.

One is inclined to believe that Pierre Loti, for all his undisputed greatness, is like some of the rest of us—out for the loot, his Jekyll half artist, half poseur, his Hyde half mercenary, the rest press agent.

NEW TRINITY CORNERSTONE.

The cornerstone of the new Trinity Parish Chapel of the Intercession, in course of erection at the southeast corner of Broadway and 155th Street, in Trinity Cemetery, was laid yesterday afternoon by Bishop Greer in the presence of the local Episcopal hierarchy, distinguished visiting clergy, and invited guests, while more than a thousand other persons stood in Broadway to hear and see what they could.

The procession, two blocks long, which was scheduled to start from the old Church of the Intercession at Broadway and 158th Street, left one hour late, and to the hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name," sung by the chapel choir, slowly made its way down to Trinity Cemetery, with the spectators moving along in a parallel column.

After the police escort came, the sextons of Trinity Parish, in black velvet-collared gowns, led by Sergeant W. O. Keefe of the Twenty-ninth United States Infantry, from Governors Island, in gala uniform. Next came the vested choir of the chapel, including twenty small boys with sweet soprano voices; the Master Builder, Howard Hager, a representative of the architectural firm of Cram, Goodhue & Ferguson, who designed the new Gothic Chapel; lay officials of the diocese; the Vestry Auxiliary of the Chapel; members of the Vestry of Trinity Church, including Col. Jay, Senior Warden; Supreme Court Justice Vernon M. Davis, H. H. Cammann and others; visiting clergy and the clergy of the diocese in white vestments and silken stoles embroidered with gold and soft colors, and members of the Faculty of the General Theological Seminary, wearing mortar boards and academic gowns with bright crimson doctors' hoods dangling down their backs. The Rev. Milo H. Gates, Vicar of the chapel, the ceremoniarius; the Rev. Edmund Banks Smith, Chaplain of Governors Island; the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, Rector of Trinity Parish; Bishop Suffragan Burch and Bishop Greer formed the rear guard of the procession.

It was just 4:30 o'clock when two laborers strained at the tackle and slowly lowered the heavy cornerstone into place on a bed of mortar prepared by William Moore, the Master Workman in charge, while the choir sang a hymn. Then Bishop Greer stepped forward and, having struck the stone three times with a gavel-shaped wooden hammer, pronounced the solemn benediction, while the assembly stood with bared heads.

The ceremony completed, Bishop Greer stepped to the rail of the improvised platform and preached for ten minutes to the throng of women parishioners in Broadway. He said in part:

"It is not safe to make predictions about the future of New York, but indications are that Washington Heights is destined to become one of the great and crowded residential sections of the city. Indications are that this chapel, situated on the crest of a hill overlooking the Hudson, inviting and withal so beautiful, will draw people here in large and increasing numbers.

"All parishes will help one another, for parishes are not in competition like competitors in business. That is a commercial concept. And commercialism can never do the work required of the Church of God. A new and better era is coming and dawning, an era in which the church throughout the world is growing with the recovered consciousness of its unity.

"The chief reason for erecting this edifice is not for it to serve itself. The able and devoted Rector of Trinity Parish has shown that is not the spirit in which he is discharging his great task. The chief reason is to help the American people to become, through their loyalty to God, loyal to their country."

Dr. Manning also spoke briefly.

"People tell us," he said, "that the influence of religion is declining. They speak to us of what they are pleased to call outworn creeds and discredited Christology. Men whose own faith is declining are apt to think that Christianity is declining. But here in this place we are erecting a building because the present church building is unable to hold the people who want to come."

The Vicar of the chapel also spoke, extending a welcome to all. The ceremonies were brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem, the crowd in the street joining with the choir and guests on the platform.

The gathering included, among others, Dr. Clendening of St. Peter's, Westchester; Canon Jones of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine; Dr. Van de Water of St. Andrew's; Dr. Crocker of the Church of the Epiphany; Dr. Nichols of Holy Trinity, and Professors Denslow, Edmonds, Shepherd, and Jenks of the General Theological Seminary.

Miss Eliza Audubon, a daughter of the great naturalist; Mrs. Sanger, Dr. and Mrs. Louis Rodenstein, M. T. Williamson, Pell W. Foster, and Emmet Fay, who were among the guests, had seen the cornerstone of the old chapel laid.

The new chapel will be the third church to be occupied by the congregation of the Intercession. The first was founded by the Audubons in 1846 at what is now Amsterdam Avenue and 154th Street.

The contents of the cornerstone of the original church, which had been preserved, were deposited in the new cornerstone, together with an interesting collection of current church records. The cornerstone of the second church, founded in 1872 at Broadway and 158th Street, was removed and placed under the new cornerstone.

The Directors of the committee are Henry White, J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., Henry van Dyke, W. K. Vanderbilt, A. Barton Hepburn, George Foster Peabody, Joseph H. Choate, John Claflin, W. D. Guthrie, and Robert W. de Forest. The petition for incorporation was signed by Robert Bacon, ex-Ambassador to France; Frederic R. Coudert, Paul Fuller, Jr., John H. Finley, and Nicholas Murray Butler.

Property of Ammonia Manufacturer Went to Wife and Children.

Edward H. Wardwell, a manufacturer of ammonia of Newark, N. J., who lived in New Canaan, Conn., left $236,802, all in personalty, according to an appraisal of his property filed in the Transfer Tax Office of the Surrogates' Court yesterday by Deputy State Controller Wallace S. Fraser. Mr. Wardwell died on April 22, 1911, without making a will, and his estate was divided between his wife and three children.

His money was invested in stocks and bonds, and although Mr. Wardwell accumulated this by manufacturing ammonia, his business at the time of his death was valued, according to the appraisal, at $7,190.

RODIN'S GREAT SOUL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Gsell's book upon Rodin, as reported recently from Paris, giving his opinion on the point of view of modern artists is the most pertinent word—because it comes from so high an authority—which has been uttered recently upon sculpture. Rodin states, according to Mr. Gsell:

> To any artist worthy of the name all nature is beautiful, because his eyes, fearlessly accepting all exterior truth, read there as in a book all inner truth. Not a feature deceives him; hypocrisy is as transparent as sincerity.

Rodin might have added: Real, unconventional loveliness is as distinguishable as the banal, the academic, or the more artificial forms of the hour. He further declares that "the beauty of the Greek ideal is ever present, and there is as much loveliness in the human form to-day as when Phidias immortalized his race." But he also says this loveliness is passing into oblivion unrecorded, because the artists of to-day are blind. He adds: "That is all the difference."

Rodin meant more, he meant what I will add. The artists have not seen nor felt nor understood the present, although they still seem to appreciate the beauty of the Greek. Great emotion with great understanding, again united with mastery over medium, are indispensable in the production of a masterpiece in song, form or color. Prophetic insight coupled with great love and trained to be a master of some one of the mediums, which the human race has invented or discovered as the means to express itself, is lost in our day, as Rodin laments.

What is true in France and in Europe is a hundredfold more true in America, for we at least have been born—many of us—under heroic conditions. This land of promise, which the tired old world so long prophesied, has given the adventurous offspring of the great peoples of the past a new world to play within and to operate in. We have in five hundred years lived and relived the epics of Greece and Rome, with—shall we say?—a rather nobler aim. We have secured liberty and conscience for humanity and political freedom; human slavery has passed forever from our midst. As regards material ends, we conceive and build as the gods conceived and built, yet no man seems to see the great underlying uplift in our race that makes even our terrible trusts wonderful and some way noble. Neither painter nor sculptor nor the writers of our songs see, as Rodin puts it, the wonder-world we live in.

If Rodin feels as he does about France, handicapped by her own narrower traditions—as each European country in turn is handicapped—how shocked he would be to find the eye, the mind, the soul, which are the artist of America, wholly oblivious and unconscious of our great hour, and our whole people with their noses in the tombs of the past.

I hold Rodin as one of the greatest individuals of history, one of the rarest souls of whom we have record during the past three thousand years. He is passing, and there will be nothing left to speak for this man who stands with Phidias, Donatello, Rembrandt, and Shakespeare but a trail of broken fancies. He has been with us seventy-two years; he has been a master of consummate skill since he was twenty-three. Yet the nineteenth century has made no adequate use of his incomparable gifts.

It is the way with the old world; it is the way of the new. Paris is covered with monuments French to their hollow core, done by men whose gift it is to get and not to give. We have become "Beaux-Arts" through and through. "Beaux-Arts" has come to have a place in our language, much as "bif-stek" to the palate of Paris. It means no longer "beautiful arts," it means a very strange product invented and imported from a certain quarter of Paris. It does not mean emotion. It is gossip, not gospel.

A great deal has been written about Rodin, most of it not worth reading. But Mr. Gsell's "autobiography within a biography" promises glimpses of the real man, such as we who know him have long longed to see revealed.

DREW SEMINARY'S HEAD.

MADISON, N. J., Oct. 24.—The Rev. Dr. Ezra Squier Tipple, recently elected head of the Drew Theological Seminary, the pioneer theological institution of Methodism in this country, was formally installed in office as President here to-day. The installation ceremonies were attended by representatives of many colleges, universities, and theological seminaries from all parts of the country, most of them resplendent in many colored academic costumes of institutions of this country and Europe.

Among the representatives of various institutions were Prof. Theodore W. Hunt of Princeton, Prof. James Everett Frame of Columbia University and the Union Theological Seminary, Prof. James Alan Montgomery of the University of Pennsylvania, Prof. William North Rice of Wesleyan, Prof. William W. Davies of Ohio Wesleyan University, President W. H. S. Demorest of Rutgers, President William H. Crawford of Allegheny, Dr. Stephen Joseph Herben of Northwestern University, Dr. Whitford L. McDowell of Johns Hopkins, Dr. J. E. Crowther of Dakota Wesleyan University, President George R. Grose of De Pauw, President L. H. Murlin of Boston University, Dr. Christian F. Reisner of Baker University, President John O. Spencer of Morgan College, Dr. William S. Bovard of the University of Southern California, President Homan Fletcher of Willamette University, Dean William H. Allison of Colgate Theological Seminary, President George B. Stewart of Auburn Theological Seminary, Dr. John D. Davis of Princeton Theological Seminary, Prof. Albert P. Tenney of the General Theological Seminary, President George E. Horr of Newton Theological Institution, Prof. William Palmer Ladd of Berkeley Divinity School, Prof. Curtis M. Geer of Hartford Theological Seminary, Prof. John H. Raven of the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church in America, Prof. Henry C. Sheldon of the Boston University School of Theology, and Prof. Daniel Evans of the Andover Theological Seminary.

In his inaugural address Dr. Tipple discussed how the theological seminary might produce ministers properly trained for the needs of the present age.

"It is just at this point," he declared, "that the sharpest criticism is urged against theological seminaries, and there is criticism a plenty. Heckling schools of theology is not one of the lost arts. Criticism of other schools, such as our public schools and colleges, has been abundant and sharp during recent years; but the theological schools have been even more vigorously assailed, and there are many who are beginning to feel 'that the chorus of criticism on the historic theological curriculum is sufficiently loud to make pertinent the question whether, as a universal curriculum for all ministerial training, it meets the real needs of the present or equips men adequately for contact with the problems by which they are sure to be confronted when they pass from the walls of the seminary to the great needy world outside,' and also to inquire what kind of training is needed for the making of the modern minister.

"The supreme business of the theological school must be to train men to preach, to take the average man and prepare him to be an effective preacher. To-day, as never before, the Church needs a ministry skilled in the most difficult of all arts, the effective and popular presentation of the Gospel without notes and with a thrill of personal conviction and suffused with what Guizot called 'the divine passion for souls.'

"We must interpret to this age the message and the mission of Jesus Christ, and to do this demands of us adequate knowledge not only of the message and of the mission, but, as I have said, adequate knowledge of and sympathy with the age."

PACK CARNEGIE HALL TO HONOR MAXWELL

CHORUS OF 500 CHILDREN

Friends of Dr. William H. Maxwell filled Carnegie Hall last evening to celebrate his completion of twenty-five years of service as City Superintendent of Schools.

On the large stage, which was draped and festooned with American flags, were 550 girls and boys from the public schools. Five hundred from the De Witt Clinton, Wadleigh, and Washington Irving High Schools of Manhattan, Morris High School of the Bronx, and the Commercial, Boys', Girls', and Manual Training Schools of Brooklyn made up a well-trained chorus, which, under the conductorship of Dr. Frank R. Rix, sang so creditably as to win rounds of hearty applause. The other fifty students from the De Witt Clinton and Commercial High Schools composed an orchestra under the leadership of Edward J. A. Zeiner.

The introductory address was by Mr. Low, who said in part:

Mr. Maxwell became Associate Superintendent of Schools in 1882, when I was Mayor of Brooklyn, and he served in that capacity until 1887, when he was elected City Superintendent of Schools. During this period I knew little of him, but I happened to read his first report as City Superintendent of Schools, and as I laid it down I said to myself: "Here is a man who understands his business thoroughly well." From that day to this I have been not only his supporter but his admirer.

Mr. Maxwell has brought to the discharge of his great task several qualities in an extraordinary degree, without which no one can lift a public school system continually toward better things.

Shakespeare said, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown"; and I dare say that Mr. Maxwell might paraphrase it by saying, "Uneasy lies the head of a Superintendent of Public Schools." It is not the least of his qualifications for the work that he has to do that he has been a good fighter, courageous and persistent in striving for that which he believed to be right. Such a man is sure to make enemies; but he also makes good friends. And when a man's ideals are high and noble, as are those of Mr. Maxwell, his friends are likely to be more numerous than his enemies. I do not mean to say that Mr. Maxwell is always right, nor that he has made no mistakes. If I were to say that, I should have to say that he was more than human. But this I do say, and say without fear of successful contradiction, that whereas the schools of the City of New York prior to Mr. Maxwell's administration were held in light esteem outside of the borders of New York, there is today no corner of the United States in which men do not turn to the public schools of New York for inspiration and help.

At the conclusion of his address Mr. Low read letters from these persons who were unable to be present: President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot of Harvard, M. G. Brombaugh, City Superintendent of Schools of Philadelphia; Andrew S. Draper, New York State Commissioner of Education, and F. B. Dyer, Boston's City Superintendent of Schools, and from Ambassador Reid. All wrote in high praise of Dr. Maxwell's work. Mr. Low also read the following letter from Mayor Gaynor:

> Dear Mr. Babbott: I shall not be able to attend the meeting in honor of Dr. Maxwell, but I am glad to testify to the large work which he has done as Superintendent of Schools, first in Brooklyn, and now in the great city. He is a remarkable man, and is entitled to all the honor which this meeting can give him. Sincerely yours,
> W. J. GAYNOR, Mayor.

Supt. Girton, who spoke after Mr. Low, praised Dr. Maxwell's work, and spoke of him as fond of a good fight. Principal Felter said that the purifying effects of the fire of opposition have always been Dr. Maxwell's, and that the word despair was not in his vocabulary. President Butler spoke as an old-time friend and as a citizen in praise of the City Superintendent. Ex-Mayor Low then presented to him a handsome silver tea service, consisting of eleven pieces, on behalf of the Citizens' Testimonial Committee.

Dr. Maxwell was much affected when he arose to speak. Three hearty cheers from the audience greeted him, and the school children on the stage gave a cry ending with, "Hurrah! Maxwell, Maxwell, Maxwell!" The City Superintendent said he felt his regrets.

One was that the good father and mother who thirty-eight years ago—"it would be just thirty-eight years to-morrow"—sent him across the Atlantic with their prayers and blessings and best wishes were not present to enjoy this testimonial. His other regret was that so many of the Principals associated with him in Brooklyn when he began his work all had passed away except one. He said it delighted him to see in one of the boxes his good old friend Edward Wood, who had brought him back to his work of education when, tired of vainly seeking a job, he was about to enter another profession. Then Dr. Maxwell added:

"You should know, the people of this city should know, that your Superintendent of Schools never has had, and has not now, any power or authority, in and of himself, to institute a policy, to add to or subtract from the course of study, to appoint or to promote a teacher, to organize a school or a class, or to do any of the thousand and one things that constitute the routine of school management, or even to nominate, much less to select, except in the case of the Board of Examiners, his immediate assistants.

"Since 1902, with the exception of the authority to cancel or renew the temporary license of a teacher during the probationary period of three years of teaching, he has had no authority to do anything on his own initiative. In the matter of licensing teachers he has one vote in five in the Board of Examiners. On the executive side of our work—in the nomination of teachers, in proposing changes in the curriculum, and in recommending textbooks—he has one vote in nine in the Board of Superintendents. Your Superintendent is entitled to have these facts known and weighed in forming any estimate of the value of his services. For defects and weaknesses in the schools he cannot be held entirely responsible, because he has not had the authority to remedy them. For what of good has been accomplished, he is entitled only to a small share in the credit. All that I would claim for myself, what I would chiefly wish my friends to believe, is, that during the twenty-five years I have been Superintendent I have tried to discover the best educational thought of modern times, to adapt it to the needs of the New York schools; that I have never done anything or advocated anything, or refrained from doing or advocating anything contrary to my own conviction, either to gain popularity or to disarm opposition, and that never, through anticipation of praise or fear of abuse, have I sacrificed my own independence or yielded the rights and prerogatives of the great office I have the honor to hold.

"For those who must go early to work I have aimed to secure the opportunity for some industrial training in evening school, in Summer school, and in day trade school. Alas! What has been done is little in comparison with the enormous number of boys and girls to be helped. There are two great obstacles in the way: The readiness of employers to give work to children who are not equipped for work and lack of resources on the part of the Board of Education to provide the enormously expensive equipment for a sufficient number of trade schools. The recklessness of employers should be met here, as it has been met in Germany, by requiring them to give each child employed who is under 18 years of age at least six hours a week out of the employer's time for industrial training."

A Step Backwards

The mission of saving and conservative investment is to provide for the future—if not for one's self, for those dependent upon him. No savings account or sound investment ever should be disturbed because of the temptation to indulge in a luxury. To do so is not merely to reduce one's surplus, but implies a step backwards in the practice of prudent economy, which is no small handicap to the man who aims to systematically save and invest some part of his earnings.

If you desire to inform yourself regarding those investments which in our judgment are thoroughly conservative, we suggest that you send for our Circular No. 835, "Conservative Investments."

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Another sharp selling movement, superficially resembling those which on Monday and again on Wednesday of this week weighed the market down, occurred at the beginning of the last hour of trading yesterday, but, contrary to the experience on the earlier days of the week, there was a sharp rebound which greatly reduced the declines and in some cases carried stocks high enough to show net gains for the day. The aggressive selling of yesterday afternoon had all the appearance of a concentrated bear movement undertaken in the hope of causing a repetition of the liquidation which previously had proved more than the market could support. Short selling had played a part in the two previous sharp declines, but then bear operations were a contributing and not a dominating influence as they seemed to be in yesterday's movement. It seemed clear from the action of the market that liquidation was much diminished in volume, and this was further indicated by the fact that the day's total showed a considerable falling off compared with Wednesday. The fundamental explanation of yesterday's Stock Exchange experience seemed to be that many prices had reached a level at which the very favorable conditions prevailing in the United States counterbalanced the effect of the heavy foreign liquidation which this market had been called upon to absorb. It is true, of course, that many of the stocks sold by Europe have still to reach this market, and their actual arrival must be taken into account as among the things which will present obstacles to a speedy recovery from the conditions which have lately depressed the market. Against this factor, however, there is presented as a sustaining and uplifting force the wonderfully favorable volume of business which, to mention but one of the several ways in which it is being tangibly reflected, is resulting in a remarkable improvement in railroad earnings.

The sturdiness of yesterday's rebound from the day's lowest prices which, it is worth noting, did not quite reach in the case of most of the active issues the bottom prices of Wednesday, was all the more noteworthy in view of the stiffening of the money market indicated here at home by an advance in call money to 6 per cent. and by a rise in discount rates at several of the European centres, accompanied by an increase in the German bank rate from 4½ per cent. to 5 per cent. Our banks again lost cash and there was some large demands for fresh loans in connection with the movement of American securities from Europe to this market. These two factors, coupled with the general active business demand for money, sufficiently explained the rise in call rates and the somewhat firmer tone of the time money market. Of the rise in the rate of the Imperial Bank of Germany to 5 per cent. it should be said that this figure is a normal one for this season and that the advance still leaves Berlin in a position of relatively greater ease than either Paris or London. Within the last few days German bankers have made bids here of 4¾ per cent. for sixty day loans but our own money needs preclude any interest on the part of our bankers in foreign loans. These bids have, of course, been made on the assumption of the possibility of a modification in the near future of the position which prevails just now in the New York market but there is no indication at the moment of any sufficient decline in money rates to bring this market to the level of these German bids.

The war in Southeastern Europe and the influence which it is exerting over the European situation will doubtless continue for some time a factor of prime importance, taking the markets of the world as a whole, but whatever the effect of this situation may be upon our own market the influence here will be materially diminished by the fact that business is good and profits are increasing so satisfactorily that every further decline would undoubtedly attract additional general support to the market. In the long run the country's bountiful crops and its recent rapid recuperation from slackness in industry must count for more than European political unsettlement. It seems unbelievable that the war now going on should bring results fulfilling the worst of the fears to which the European markets have been yielding sufficiently to cause a feeling of much uneasiness even in the intervals between the heavy waves of selling which have unsettled all the European markets and which this week have been finding reflection in our own.

Nashville Shareholders to Benefit.

It is said that Henry Walters plans to complete his cycle of financing operations by issuing $6,300,000 of new stock of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis to stockholders at par. The proceeds are to be used for the retirement of the $6,300,000 of first mortgage 7 per cent. bonds, which mature July 1 next. There is outstanding only $10,000,000 of Nashville stock, and the offer of new shares at par would carry valuable rights. In this way the demands of the minority shareholders for the payment of an extra dividend by way of compensation for their lean years would be satisfied. The last sale of Nashville stock was made Oct. 11 at 180. At this price the rights in connection with the new issue will be worth about $30 a share.

About half the issues traded in yesterday showed small gains, while the other half showed small losses. Quotations in some of the leaders backed and filled, giving promise of being about to move one way or the other in a decisive fashion, but ending the day where they were twenty-four hours earlier. The two most active stocks were Steel and Reading. Reading flucuated over a range of 1½ points and Steel over a range of 1 point, but both issues ended the day unchanged. The next most active stock was Union Pacific, which sold down 1¼ points and then recovered 1⅛ before the close.

Kayser on Big Board.

The first sales of Julius Kayser common and preferred were made on the Stock Exchange yesterday, 100 shares of each changing hands. The common, which had been quoted 92 bid, 100 asked on the curb, made its first price at 95¾, while the preferred, which the curb had quoted 110-112, sold at 109.

The annual stockholders' meeting of the New York, New Haven & Hartford are unique in that they furnish opportunities for the owners of the property to get into personal touch with the management. The typical annual meeting is even less interesting than the typical annual report. Occasionally a shareholder takes his meeting notice seriously, and puts himself out to appear at the company's headquarters with a view to voting his stock in person. He finds the President wearing a bored look while the Secretary mumbles through the motions which have been drawn up by the general counsel. After the seconding of each motion by the Assistant Secretary, the tellers credit the ayes with 416,365 shares or so, proxies for which they have in their possession by the grace of absent shareholders, and before the stockholder who is there to vote in person comprehends what is going on the Secretary is reading the next motion. Mr. Mellen is enough of a New Englander to appreciate the hold which the old town meeting idea has throughout the section traversed by his lines, and he holds an "open" meeting each Fall. He expects all of the New Haven Directors who have no good excuse for being elsewhere to attend these meetings, and the presence of J. P. Morgan has made it hard for lesser lights on the board to plead more important engagements on the annual meeting day. There were twentyy-one members of the board at Wednesday's meeting. Mr. Mellen has become so accustomed to having pertinent questions put to him on these occasions that the peaceful atmosphere which hung over this year's session irritated him to the point of prodding one of his old-time hecklers to start an argument. Thereupon, the stockholder moved a vote of confidence in the management.

During the period last Winter between the distribution of Standard Oil subsidiary stocks to the New Jersey Company's stockholders and the time many months later when the facts about the assets of these concerns began to reach the general public a fat killing was made by insiders, who bought up fractional lots of Standard Oil of Indiana at prices ranging upward from $1,100 a share. When the company paid a 2,900 per cent. dividend on May 15 last there was a natural heartburning among the small and ill-informed stockholders, who had ignorantly parted with their allotments. They took some comfort when the price was running up toward $7,000 a share, just before the distribution, that the milk was out of the cocoanut, and that those who paid at the top levels might regret their bargains. Since the increase in capital from $1,000,000 to $30,000,000, however, the price has gone to about $330, equivalent to around $9,000 a share on the old capitalization, and yesterday keener reason for regret was furnished by the declaration of an extra dividend of 7 per cent., payable Nov. 30, to stock of record Nov. 12, in addition to the regular disbursement of 3 per cent. quarterly.

Guesses on Steel's Showing.

As the end of the month approaches estimates are made of the period's results in the relation of new business coming in to shipments by the United States Steel Corporation. With shipments heavy and the rate at which new orders are coming in showing wide fluctuations, estimates up to a week or so ago inclined to an actual falling off in unfilled tonnage in October. The heavy ordering since, however, has led to a reversal of the predictions, and one trade authority voiced the opinion yesterday that the next report might show an increase in unfilled tonnage of from 350,000 to 400,000 tons.

BOURSES OF EUROPE

LONDON, Friday, Oct. 25.—The Times says in its City article to-day:

"Money was again in good demand yesterday, up to 3¾ per cent. being paid in some quarters for day-to-day advances. Fair amount was renewed by the India Council at 3¾ per cent. for about a month.

"Discount rates were distinctly firmer, 4 13-16 per cent. being the minimum quotation for fine three months' paper.

"Over £300,000 in sovereigns was withdrawn from the Bank of England, chiefly for Brazil.

"With the prominent exception of Mexican railway stocks, which opened strong on the news of the capture of Vera Cruz by the Federal troops, the stock markets had an easier appearance during the first hour, owing to further liquidation from the North, which chiefly affected Grand Trunk Railway stocks. Otherwise there was no decided relapse in prices.

"Early advices from the Continent were of a reassuring character, the Berlin Boerse being quite unaffected by the rise in the Reichsbank rate, while Paris operators supported Rio Tinto shares.

"In the afternoon the markets relapsed into a condition of complete idleness, but on the whole the tone remained fairly steady. With the chief Continental Bourses and Wall Street doing practically nothing, prices remained stationary, and except that gilt-edged securities weakened slightly owing to the underwriting of the New South Wales loan, while Mexican Railway stocks advanced further and Grand Trunk junior stocks more than recovered their initial fall, there were few features of interest."

PARIS, Oct. 24.—Prices were generally firm on the Bourse to-day.

BERLIN, Oct. 24.—A better tone prevailed on the Börse to-day.

Trading was very quiet and fluctuations were limited except in Canadian Pacific, which was weak.

Appreciation in Value

is a very important factor in a successful investment. Bonds of well managed Public Utility companies serving a growing territory afford splendid opportunities for such appreciation.

We offer at 95 and interest, to yield from 5.35% to 6.44%, a closed underlying first mortgage bond which is now a direct obligation of a company exclusively serving one of the most rapidly growing cities of the country with light, heat, power, and street railway service.

Net earnings have doubled in seven years, and other underlying issues have increased to prices ranging from 99 to 105.

THE BUSINESS WORLD

No Allowances for Spoiled Lemons Destroyed or Liquors Vanished.

In overruling a protest filed by Cappadonia & Maniscalce and others, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday held that when imported lemons were condemned and destroyed by the Board of Health, the failure to file the certificate of condemnation within fifteen days prevented recovery of duties on the merchandise. The importers contended that the Secretary's regulation was without authority of law, unreasonable, and unnecessary. Judge Somerville affirmed the Collector.

The board, in denying a claim by Kwong Yuen Shing, held that no allowance can be made under the tariff for missing bottles of liquor sent to the importer's store under bond and not taken to the Appraiser's warehouse for examination. Part of an importation was delivered directly to the importers, while the rest was examined at the Public Stores. The firm missed several bottles in the consignment delivered from the dock. Judge Somerville, ruling against the allowance, found that the merchandise was not examined officially.

The board overruled a protest by Morimura Brothers on classification under the act of 1909 of artificial fruit. The Collector assessed the product at 60 per cent. ad valorem, under Paragraph 438, while the importers asked either 50 per cent., under Paragraph 403, or 35 per cent., under Paragraph 431.

SILK MARTS UNSETTLED.

Despite the fact that the demand from European manufacturers has lessened somewhat under the strain of political conditions, the Milan raw silk market is reported generally steady. The demand for American account is better than it has been, and the reelers have little cause for concern. The Yokohama market is quiet, and prices have dropped about 20 yen from the highest figure touched in the recent advance. Shipments of Japanese silks to this country for the week aggregated 2,800 bales.

According to cables received by H. L. Gwalter & Co., the Canton market is unusually firm. Stocks are light and offerings consist only of small lots. Shanghai cables report the market firm, with holders offering sparingly. Prices on coarse silks have advanced again in sympathy with a higher exchange. The local market was somewhat quieter during the week under the influence of the decline at Yokohama. Canton silks were much wanted here for crepes and were higher. Buyers appeared to be watching the market very closely.

DRESS TRIMMING RETURNS.

"There is hardly a trade that is hit by the returned merchandise evil more than this," said an official of a local dress-trimming house yesterday. "It has long been a source of annoyance, and figures show that it is increasing by leaps and bounds. Last year, in actual figures, our returns amounted to $15,999.21. To Oct. 1, this year, they aggregated $18,003. For October we estimate on the returns made so far that they will reach $3,000. That will make $21,000 for ten months in 1912, against $16,000 for the whole of last year. So far, the 1912 returns approximate 8 per cent. of the gross business we have done. Figuring the lost profit at 10 per cent., and the depreciation in the value of the goods anywhere from 10 to 100, it is easily seen what this evil means to us. And I firmly believe that it hits the rest of the trade just as hard.

"It is not only on the merchandise that we lose. Last year we paid $1,919.32 in expressage on returned goods and back orders shipped prepaid by us. To Oct. 1 this year we paid $1,809.65, and $134 was paid in the first half of the present month. In September alone expressage cost us $375.

"Allowing half of last year's expressage for the amount paid on returns and adding to it the value of the returned goods it will be seen that the evil cost us close to $17,000. Allowing for a 10 per cent. profit, on the average, it means that we had to sell $170,000 worth of goods to break even on the returns.

"It is evident, I believe, that some sort of a protective trade association is urgently needed. There is little doubt but that the time is ripe for it. But every member of the trade, ourselves included, seems to be afraid to make the first move."

Interest on Florida East Coast Bonds.

The Florida East Coast Railway Company, the H. M. Flagler enterprice, which opened service last January on the last link of its line connecting the Florida Keys with Key West, has declared 2½ per cent. interest on its $20,000,000 general mortgage income bonds for the year ended June 30. The bonds were issued in 1909 to run fifty years, and paid 3½ per cent. interest in 1910 and 4 per cent. in 1911. The interest just declared is payable Nov. 1. The road has a total mileage from Jacksonville to Key West of 522, and is capitalized at $5,000,000, all the stock being owned by H. M. Flagler.

BUSINESS NOTES.

According to the Strohmeyer & Arpe Company, the first shipments of the current season's pack of Holland herrings are now arriving in this market. The trade is opening up well. In Scotch herrings regular large Shetland fulls are getting scarce, and current shipments consist principally of Lochfines. The price of anchovies has advanced because of the poor catch of sprats in Norway. The catch of tunny fish is poor and is reflected in higher prices. The market is absolutely bare of garlic.

Reports to Willett & Gray give the movement of sugar at four United States ports for the week, figures in tons, as follows: Receipts, 49,764, against 30,363 last week and 40,585 last year. Meltings, 30,000, compared with 80,000 and 28,000. Total stock, 116,975, against 97,211 and 92,463.

Shipments of Japanese raw silk to the United States from Yokohama since the beginning of the current year aggregate 62,900 bales, against 53,500 in the same period last year. Shipments received from Canton in the first half of October amounted to 4,500 bales, against 7,500 in the corresponding time a year ago.

SIDELIGHTS ON SELLING.

An increasing demand for the brassiere is noted here as the adoption of the low-cut corset becomes more general. Some of the higher-priced models embody all-over laces, with net linings and embellishments of dainty lace or ribbon.

Some particularly handsome effects in veilings are shown in the local market this season. They are ranked high among the finest of these lines ever put out and are meeting considerable success in retail circles.

There is an excellent demand for black messalines reported from the cutting-up trade. For once, at least, it is said, the demand is sufficiently heavy to force the price question well into the background.

According to recent Parisian advices, the smart ball gown this Winter will have unusually short sleeves. Because of this a general adoption of long gloves, particularly the twenty and twenty-four button lengths, is looked for.

CONSULAR TRADE NOTES.

According to Argentine trade returns for the first six months of the present year, imports, exclusive of gold, were valued at $176,947,144 United States currency, an increase of $4,344,742 over the corresponding period of 1911. Exports amounted to $236,143,705, a gain of $45,520,183, and the balance of trade in favor of Argentina was $59,196,561. Gold and bullion imports amounted to $27,827,216, an advance of $18,061,451, and exports to $135,352, a diminution of $657,013.

In order to develop the exchange of postal orders between Russia and the United States, it has been decided by Russian authorities that payment on postal orders received from America will be made during the course of a whole year, instead of eleven months, as formerly. Postal orders from America will be accepted to any address duly designated by the sender, and not merely to places mentioned in the lists.

During the calendar year 1911 there were built and registered in Canada 339 vessels, measuring 27,736 tons and representing an estimated investment of $1,148,000. As during the year 279 vessels were removed from the Dominion's shipping register for various causes, there were left on the books on Dec. 31 8,088 vessels of 770,446 tons.

BROAD SILK DEMAND GROWS.

Brocades Wanted for Spring—Charmeuse, Messalines, and Crepes Active.

The rapid growth of the demand for brocades for Spring is the present feature of the local silk market. Buyers outside of New York are taking them in a liberal manner, and, in view of the fact that only a fair percentage of the domestic mills are equipped to make the real arcticle, it is believed that the country's production will be well covered before the season becomes old. Some imitation brocades have been brought out in embossed messalines and similar fabrics, but they are derided by several of the leading houses in the trade as business disturbing factors. Pulling or pressing these imitations, it is contended, quickly removes all traces of the brocade design.

The demand for the cheaper grades of charmeuse has slowed up appreciably, but there has as yet been no apparent diminution of the call for the medium and better grades. Messalines still rank well among the best sellers. A fair demand for chiffon taffetas is expected in certain quarters, and printed silks are well thought of here and there. Crepes continue popular.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Nervousness marked the dealings on the Consolidated Stock Exchange, with changes of tone frequent. Transactions totaled a little better than one-half of Wednesday's heavy aggregate. Operators on the Exchange were evidently exercising caution in regard to undertaking extensive new commitments. There was a transaction in Hide and Leather common at 6¼; the only sale of that stock reported in Wall Street. Sales totaled 46,210 shares, with fifty-nine different stocks represented.

COMMODITY MARKETS.

Wheat and Provisions Lower on European News—Cotton Stronger.

The wheat market declined on disappointing foreign news and a pause in the foreign demand. Cash grain was quiet. Corn was quiet and steady. Weather conditions were excellent. Oats were steady with good distribution. Provisions were lower on larger packing returns. Cottonseed oil was steady. Cotton was higher with shorts buying freely. Cables were steady and spot news generally firm, while weather prospects were not entirely favorable. Coffee ruled at slightly higher levels.

WHEAT.

The wheat market opened weak on the cables which were very disappointing and continued heavy all day, closing at ¾@⅞c net decline. English markets were affected by selling against large import purchases and free offerings from competing countries, while the Continent was lower and the little excitement over the war seemed to have disappeared. The flattening out of the foreign market was distinctly disappointing, and a lot of wheat bought the previous day came on the market. The demand for export wheat was very slow, although fifteen or twenty loads were reported. The large receipts at the West were a bearish factor, while the shipments have this week been showing some falling off at interior points. The shipments from Atlantic ports were small, although the total export movement this week has been heavy up to date. The weather was not unfavorable, and The Price Current states that Autumn sown wheat is getting an excellent start. Reports from the Northwest claim that farmers were not willing sellers of wheat at the price, and a good deal of wheat coming forward from country elevators was not being sold, but storage receipts were held by the farmers. Argentina exports for the week were estimated at 560,000 bushels. Argentina crop news is good, and the crop there is making good progress. A report from Australia claims that conditions are not promising owing to dry weather. Russian advices are of inferior quality of wheat and a rather slow movement forward to the ports.

OTHER GRAINS.

CORN.—The corn market sympathized fractionally with the decline in wheat and closed at a small net loss. The weather was excellent over most of the belt, and the crop is reported to be curing in good shape, while husking has begun in some sections. The movement of new corn to market is still limited. The trade seems to be waiting for the influence on the market of the actual movement of the new corn. Spot corn was quiet, with No. 2 quoted at 73c, elevator, and export corn, 59c, free on board, December to March. Argentina exports for the week were estimated at 6,800,000 bushels. A report by a Western firm on the crop in the seven surplus States based on husking returns indicated a total for these States of 1,880,000,000 bushels, or 60,000,000 bushels more than the October Government report.

OATS.—Trading was quiet in oats, with the market slightly easier. Offerings were not large, but demand was somewhat discouraged by the heaviness in other grain. Western receipts amounted to 1,086,000 bushels for the day, while the shipments were nearly equal to the receipts. Cash oats were steady, with No. 3 quoted at 39½c; No. 4 white, 37½@38½c; white clipped, 38½@41½c.

PROVISIONS.

Hog products were heavy, with light trading, closing at only a little recovery. Hog receipts were liberal, amounting to nearly 80,000, and the packing statement for the week showed a total of 455,000 against 385,000 the previous week and 550,000 last year. Since March 1 the packing has been 15,175,000, compared with 17,150,000 last year.

COTTONSEED OIL.

There was a moderate trade during yesterday's session, with dealings fairly well distributed through the list. Price changes were trivial, mainly downward. Refiners appeared to be on both sides of the market. Liquidation for the account of tired holders was discerned, and as sentiment is generally adverse to values, with an absence of aggressive support, it is fair to assume that there was more or less pressure of bearish origin. However, shorts bought freely. The situation in crude circles is without special change, and while some authorities maintain that the larger crop estimates have induced freer offerings, crude values have not declined near as readily as futures during the last week or so. The bulk of the reports pertaining to the consuming inquiry for cottonseed oil still suggest that the best buying emanates from compound lard quarters, with purchasing from other sources apathetic.

COTTON.

It was a very steady market during all of yesterday's trading hours. From advances of 2 to 5 points at the outset prices rose to net gains of from 15 to 17 points, reacting partially near the finals. The elimination of a short interest was partly accountable for the bulge, but it was evident that there was less inclination to press sales with weather news not as good as recently, while information concerning the spot situation was rather bullish. Moreover, the belief was expressed that the more optimistic crop estimates have had their influence for the time being.

Some authorities mentioned the probable showing of the ginning figures to-day as a factor in the buying, but it is generally recognized that at this early date the volume of ginning is not of much significance. The census figures will be given out at 10 o'clock this morning, and current estimates are for a showing of from 6,850,000 bales to 7,000,000 bales, against a quantity ginned to Oct. 18 last year of 7,759,000 bales and 5,424,000 bales for the same period last season. Unless the statistics differ radically from expectations their market effect will probably be extremely limited.

Yesterday's weather map was not construed as altogether unfavorable, inasmuch as the belt was devoid of precipitation and the frosts in the East were light. However, rain was predicted over much of the area producing cotton, and the forecast suggested that frost would again visit the belt. The tendency was to await the extent of the moisture and the severity of the cold wave, even though in conservative quarters the opinion was voiced that no pronounced disturbance was in prospect.

Spot people were again on both sides of the list during the day, leading concerns resuming their operations of buying the Winter deliveries. Part of the buying is credited to trade account, also for speculative interests. The volume of selling against the actual held at the South was not heavy, but the impression is that the tendency will be for Southern offerings to increase on any material bulge unless it develops that the crop is being overestimated or that trade demand is being understated.

Most of the reports dwelling on the spot situation were indicative of a continued firm undertone, with emphasis still placed on the difficulty in securing the better descriptions of the raw material. The movement of cotton is moderate. Yesterday's port receipts approximated 92,000 bales, against a similar amount last year, and to-day's movement is figured at about 90,000 bales, against 78,000 bales last year. Into sight for the week will probably total from 665,000 to 680,000 bales, against 680,000 bales last year for this week. The Liverpool market was about as due yesterday, with moderate spot sales at that centre, and it seems as though the Balkan affairs are exerting less influence in the foreign cotton market than in grain and financial circles abroad.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Over $2,000,000 Invested in Two New Park Avenue Apartments—Beekman Street Loft Sold—Bronx and Brooklyn Deals—Suburban Market Continues Active.

The sale of two of the newest and largest Park Avenue apartment houses, involving property valued at $2,000,000 or over, added a decidedly active tone to the investment feature of the realty market yesterday. The structures are known respectively as 829 Park Avenue, on the southeast corner of Seventy-sixth Street and 969 Park Avenue, on the northeast corner of Eighty-second Street. They have been sold by the owners and builders, Harford, P., George P. and Keith P. Walker to out-of-town investors. John H. Randolph is the buyer of 969 Park Avenue which has been held at $1,200,000 and Arthur B. Jekyll has purchased 829, held at $1,100,000. Title passed yesterday to James O. Tryon, acting for the individual owners and in the sale they were represented by Robert B. Burbank of the law firm of Burbank & Tryon. Eight hundred and twenty-nine Park Avenue carries a mortgage of $725,000 and 969 Park Avenue one of $880,000.

The Seventy-sixth Street house covers a plot 117.2 by 100 and the architect's building plan estimated the cost at $600,000. The Eighty-second Street house covers a plot 139.8 by 100 and the estimated cost of the structure was $650,000. Pickering & Walker were the architects of both buildings. The Eighty-second Street house contains thirty-five duplex suites with roof garden and several novel features while the Seventy-sixth Street building has thirty-six duplex and twelve simplex suites. The rental return from 829 Park Avenue is said to be $110,000 a year while the annual income from 969 Park Avenue is about $140,000. Pease & Elliman will represent the new owner.

Investors Buying Flats.

Julius Myers has purchased from Isaac Singer for investment the five-story double flat 107 West 114th Street on a plot 31 by 100. The H. M. Weill Company negotiated the transaction. The same brokers have also sold 58 East 120th Street, a five-story triple flat on a plot 28 by 100 to Joseph Lesser.

Buys Beekman Street Loft.

Buys Levey Interest in Broadway Block.

Through the purchase by Samuel H. Stone from the Union Trust Company representing the estate of the late Edgar J. Levey, of the latter's interest in the old Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society's block on the west side of Broadway, between 150th and 151st Streets, the contemplated partition sale of the property will not be held. The late Mr. Levey with A. L. Mordecai & Son, and Heilner & Wolf, comprised the purchasing syndicate only a year ago. The present owners also own the adjoining seventy-five foot plot, extending through from 150th to 151st Street, and now control a frontage of 200 feet on Broadway and 300 feet on each street, comprising twenty-four lots, one of the largest plots suitable for improvement in that section. Negotiations are said to be well advanced for the resale of the 150th Street corner.

'AL' PALZER SUES STATE BOXING HEAD

A CONSPIRACY, O'NEIL SAYS

Suit, Commissioner Declares, Was Inspired by Tom O'Rourke Because He Barred O'Rourke's Club from Garden.

"Al" Palzer, the heavyweight prizefighter, has brought suit in the City Court against Frank O'Neil, Chairman of the State Boxing Commission, to recover $800 which he alleges he gave the Commissioner upon his promise to arrange a fight between Palzer and "Jack" Johnson at Madison Square Garden.

Nathan Vidaver of 116 Nassau Street, who represents Palzer in the action, alleges in the complaint that soon after Palzer's fight with Bombardier Wells at the Garden, Commissioner O'Neil took $800 in cash from Palzer and immediately dispatched Robert Armstrong, negro trainer, to Chicago to negotiate with Johnson. The result of the visit, it was alleged, was that the fight was definitely booked.

The papers go on to describe a meeting held at the Hotel Victoria, in this city, between Commissioner O'Neil, Palzer, and Armstrong. The upshot of it was, according to Palzer, that Armstrong was retained at a salary of $75 a week to train him, and that for nearly six weeks the training went on without interruption.

At this juncture, however, Johnson, the papers set forth, began to come into the limelight in a discreditable way. According to the complaint, Commissioner O'Neil's enthusiasm for the fight disappeared. At length, it is set forth in the complaint, the Commissioner said to Palzer:

"You know that I am your silent partner in this matter. Well, in view of the way Johnson has been getting in bad with the public, you will readily understand that I can't afford to be mixed up with it. Besides, conditions have changed and the fight, under present circumstances, would scarcely be a success."

Hereupon, Palzer asserts, he demanded back the $800 which he accuses the Commissioner of having accepted. But his repeated requests for the return of the money met only with repeated refusals in which the Commissioner, it is said, merely reiterated that being a State Commissioner, the fact of his ever having received money could not be made public.

Commissioner O'Neil yesterday evening denied the statements in the Palzer complaint and branded as a malicious conspiracy the charge that he had ever received any money whatsoever from Palzer or that he had in any way expressed his willingness to let Johnson box in New York.

"As long as a year ago," declared Mr. O'Neil, "I was questioned as to my attitude toward Johnson and I said then as I have said since, that I would never be in favor of having the champion appear in this State. The suit which has been started against me is nothing but a conspiracy, and there are plenty of reasons to explain the efforts of Nathan Vidaver and Tom O'Rourke, who is Palzer's manager, to cast slurs on me and boxing in this State."

"Everybody knows," he continued, "that Vidaver and O'Rourke were for a long time the sole financial backers of the National Sporting Club. When the commission prevented that club from participating in the Garden fights, O'Rourke became my bitter enemy—and Vidaver with him. As a matter of fact, however, I voted in favor of letting the National Sporting Club in; but I am only one member of the Commission and I was overruled. As to Palzer, he has libel suits pending against newspapers both in this country and in England. He knows that I will appear as a witness against him, even if I must go to London to do it, and he is naturally eager to discredit me and my good name in every way he can."

"If Palzer will waive the privilege of statements included in a suit, I will sue him for criminal libel," he said, "and drive him for good out of this country. But even if he doesn't I have my plans laid. And besides, I should be very surprised, indeed, if these men dared to bring their suit to an actual trial. For, of course, they haven't the least sort of evidence against me."

Sheriff Julius Harburger was at work yesterday on a report which he will send to Gov. Dix on his action in stopping the "Gunboat" Smith and Jim Stewart bout at the Madison Square Garden last Monday night. When a statement of the referee that he and the club management, through him, had stopped the fight the Sheriff declared:

"Such a statement, if true, is not what you would call consistent, in view of the fact that Stewart was brought into the ring after the other bouts had been finished and was paraded with the evident idea of showing that he was in a fit condition to have finished the contest."

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

City.

The Municipal Civil Service Commission has approved the following:

Recommendation of Mr. Ihlseng in connection with the request of the Buildings Superintendent, Manhattan, for authority to employ Albert E. Kaestner provisionally as engineer inspector; that non-competitive examination be waived in this case, as Mr. Kaestner had passed a non-competitive examination for assistant engineer, Grade D, and obtained a good rating.

Recommendation of Mr. Rafferty that John C. Horah, an applicant for inspector of plastering, be marked qualified on the eligible list.

Emergency appointment by the Park Commissioner, Queens, of James M. Newcomb as General Inspector, (Engineering,) at $1,500 a year.

United States.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for men only on Nov. 8 to fill a vacancy in the position of Mineral Technologist in the Bureau of Mines, field service, Denver, Col., at a salary of $3,600 per annum, and vacancies as they may occur requiring similar qualifications. The duties of this position will be a study of the rarer mineral industries as to the occurrence, mining, and preparation or treatment of the rarer minerals or materials containing the rarer metals and earths. Competitors will not be required to appear at any place for examination, but will be rated upon the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated: General education and technical training, 30; experience in connection with the rarer minerals, and fitness, 40; publications or technical or professional reports, 30.

An educational training equivalent to that required for graduation from a technical or mining school or college of recognized standing is a prerequisite for consideration for this position. Applicants must have reached their 25th but not their 40th birthday on the date of the examination. They will be admitted to this examination regardless of their place of residence, but under an act of Congress only those who have been actually domiciled in the State or Territory in which they reside for at least one year previous to the date of the examination will be eligible for appointment to any vacancy which may occur in the apportioned service in Washington, D. C. Those who cannot show such residence and domicile will be eligible only for appointment to vacancies which may occur in the field service; that is, to vacancies in positions with headquarters outside of Washington, D. C. Recently the commission has obtained an appropriation whereby it is now able to have as examiners on various scientific, technical, and professional subjects men who are recognized authorities in such subjects. In passing upon the qualifications of candidates in this examination the commission will have the assistance of such an expert examiner.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—The storm that was over the Middle Atlantic Coast Wednesday night has remained stationary owing to the building up of a strong high pressure area to the northward beyond the field of observation, and rains continued in the lower lake region, New England, and the Middle Atlantic States.

There was no other precipitation of consequence in the United States except rain in the North Pacific States toward which section another severe storm is approaching.

It is colder in the Atlantic States, slightly warmer in the Central Valleys, and the Gulf States, considerably colder in the North Plains States, and warmer in the Far West.

There will be rain Friday in New England followed by fair weather Saturday and rain in the North Pacific States will continue Saturday and extend over the Northwest. Over the remainder of the country generally fair weather will prevail Friday and Saturday.

It will be colder Friday in New England, but over the remainder of the country temperature changes will not be decided.

Winds along the New England Coast will be moderate to brisk, mostly northerly; Middle Atlantic Coast, moderate northwest and north; South Atlantic Coast, light to moderate northwest to north.

STANTON WITNESSES ARE CONTRADICTORY

MANY DISCREDIT GIBNEY

The Curran Committee spent all yesterday investigating the charges of attempted extortion which were brought against Police Lieut. John F. Stanton, and upon which he was dismissed after he had testified before the committee. The evidence taken yesterday indicated that Stanton's record was much better than that of Detective Richard F. Oliver, the complainant against him, or of Thomas P. Gibney, who corroborated Oliver. While the witnesses were being examined the Democratic members of the committee grew restless, and wanted to know why the matter was gone into, and what it had to do with an investigation into police conditions, for which the committee was created. Emory R. Buckner, the chief counsel, replied that he wished to discover whether policemen who were subpoenaed by the committee would be dismissed from the force if their testimony displeased the Police Commissioner. He made it clear that if this impression got abroad the committee might just as well stop its inquiry at once.

Detective Oliver tried to bolster up his story that he had been approached by Stanton in November, 1909, and informed that it would cost him $250 to be appointed to the force. He remembered this distinctly, although it happened three years ago, but his memory on other matters of recent occurrence seemed to be very bad. Oliver made a poor impression as a witness. He directly contradicted the testimony of Chief Inspector Max F. Schmittberger, and his testimony did not agree with the testimony given by Commissioner Waldo on Stanton's trial before Deputy Commissioner McKay. It was shown that Oliver had neglected to give an accurate record of his various employments in his application for appointment, and that he had said that he had been arrested only once, while the fact was he had been twice in the hands of the police.

Gibney, a retired fireman, heard a long line of active firemen testify that his reputation was very bad, and that if they were jurors and he was a witness they would not believe him under oath. Oliver's examination was not concluded and he will be questioned again to-day. Gibney was sworn, and after a few questions he was told to report again at 10:30 o'clock this morning, when the hearing will be resumed. Both Oliver and Gibney were asked not to communicate with each other in the recess, and they promised not to do so, but nevertheless arrangements were made to have them watched throughout the night.

Chief Inspector Schmittberger was the first witness examined yesterday. He said he first heard of the charges against Stanton some time before Oct. 4. He was called to the office of Police Commissioner Waldo and met Oliver there. Asked what occurred Schmittberger said:

"Commissioner Waldo said to me that Oliver had told him of an attempt that Stanton made to extort money from him and instructed me to go to my office with Oliver, take his affidavit, and prefer charges against Stanton."

Then Schmittberger said he asked Oliver if there was anybody who could corroborate his charge against Stanton, and Oliver said that Thomas P. Gibney could. Gibney since his retirement from the Fire Department has lived in Milton, N. Y., where he works as a grape picker and at other similar jobs. Schmittberger said that Oliver knew where Gibney could be found, but Oliver, when he was under examination, said that he did not know and that Schmittberger had given him a slip of paper on which Gibney's address was written. An attempt will be made to show that Gibney only consented to come to this city and corroborate the charges against Stanton when arrangements were made to pay him for the service.

Then ex-Fire Chief Edward F. Croker was called as a witness. Mr. Buckner asked him if he knew Thomas P. Gibney. Before he could reply, Alderman Smith objected to the line of inquiry. He said the committee was not there to retry Lieut. Stanton.

"Was Gibney a policeman?" asked Mr. Smith.

Alderman Esterbrook moved to take the testimony of Croker, and the committee adopted the motion. Asked what Gibney's reputation was, Croker replied:

"Bad."

Then came other firemen, among them Capt. George H. Witter, Deputy Chief Patrick Maher, Capt. Terence P. Brennan, and Fireman Harry M. Siegel. All united in giving Gibney a very bad reputation. They said they would not believe Gibney if they were jurors and he was a witness.

Richard W. Meade, President of the New York Transportation Company, told about the strike of chauffeurs in 1906, when Oliver was one of the strikers, and about Oliver's arrest and indictment for felonious assault. Special Policeman Kern arrested Oliver and afterward withdrew his sworn complaint, so that Oliver was discharged. Then came a long line of men who gave Stanton an excellent reputation. These men were ex-Police Commissioners Bingham, Baker, and Cropsey, and ex-Deputy Commissioners Hanson, Davis, and Driscoll. These men and others familiar with Stanton, his work, and his record, spoke in the highest terms of him. They said they had made a special point of asking about him and had not found a breath of suspicion against him. When Commissioner Waldo was testifying he gave as one of the reasons for abolishing the Bureau of Investigation, the constant rumors of graft that grew out of it. Mr. Waldo seemed to have been the only Commissioner troubled in this way.

COURT SUSPECTS 'FRAME-UP.'

Discharges Defendant and Orders Arrest of Two Witnesses.

The trial of Charles Murray, a head checker employed by the Mercantile Marine Company, before Judge Mayer in the United States District Court, on a charge of having smuggled in on Sept. 19 an outfit of woman's clothes of the value of 2,065 francs, came to a sudden end yesterday by the court ordering the acquittal of the defendant and the arrest of two of the Government's witnesses. Murray has all along protested that the case was a "frame-up" against him, and Judge Mayer was sufficiently impressed by the discrepancies developed in the evidence to order a thorough investigation of the matter.

The goods, which were technically smuggled, were imported in a case addressed to J. W. Dunstan, a dressmaker, of 24 West Fifty-seventh Street, on the steamship Olympic. When the cargo was unloaded it was discovered that this case had been broken open and the contents looted. It was admitted by Murray that he had left the goods in his own suit case on Oct. 8 at a tailor's shop at 432 West Twenty-second Street, to be called for by a man named George Bainbury, but he asserted that he had done so through a job having been put over on him.

A number of things had been stolen from the cargo of the Olympic, with the result that he, as head checker, had blacklisted two of the checkers, William Devery of 525 West 175th Street, a nephew of ex-Chief of Police Devery, and George Anderson of 2,563 Third Avenue. These men, he declared, in order to get even with him, had caused the loan of his suit case to Bainbury, another checker, on the excuse that he was off for a trip to Troy, and had then placed the stolen garments in it. They next tipped off Detective Mallon that the garments might be found in the suit case at the tailor's shop, with the result that Murray was arrested, the mysterious thefts were explained, and they hoped to secure reinstatement.

The story of Murray impressed Judge Mayer so much that he ordered the exclusion from the courtroom of the witnesses as the evidence was being taken. Devery, Anderson, Bainbury, and J. J. Tiffany, a fourth checker, gave evidence, but it was found that their stories differed in material matters. Then Detective Mallon stated that Devery and Anderson had admitted to the Superintendent of the White Star Line that they had assisted in the smuggling of the finery ashore.

The result was that Judge Mayer directed the jury to acquit Murray, and bade Marshal Henkel take Devery and Anderson into custody pending a complete investigation.

REWARD FAITHFUL SERVANTS

Prizes Given to Thirty-two Women by German Housewives.

Thirty-two German women servants, who have lived with the families in which they are employed for terms ranging from two to sixteen years, received prizes at a Kaffee Klatch given in their honor at Tuxedo Hall, in Fifty-ninth Street yesterday afternoon.

It was the annual distribution of rewards for continued years of faithful service by the German Housewives' Society which has headquarters near-by in Fifty-ninth Street. Sixteen girls had been in service with one family for two years and they each received a gold brooch, in the form of a bee, the emblem of industry; other girls who had been in service for four years received gold rings and six-year service girls were rewarded with bracelets bearing the same busy bee. Girls in service continuously for ten years and more got $10 each.

There was only one girl who had spent sixteen years in continuous service. This was Rosa Hahn, who had been "bei," to use the German expression, to Mrs. M. Wineburgh, for that length of time. An address to the girls, made in German, preceded the award of prizes. They were told the value of faithful service in one family and were urged to continue as they had begun.

Moe Levy Lands a Prize

My unique position in the clothing trade—as a manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer, gives me the opportunity to offer $35 and $40 Suits and Overcoats at $20.

Not a sale, just a chance that came my way to do something for my $20 patrons that makes the ordinary "Big Twenty" look like a plugged nickel in comparison.

$35 & $40 Suits and Overcoats at $20

The line represents over 100 attractive weaves in popular English effects and an assortment of 12 different suit and ten smart overcoat models to choose from, including the conservative coat, the single breasted coat (belted back or plain), the double-breasted belted back coat, and the double-breasted convertible collar coat, with or without belt.

You rarely have the opportunity at the beginning of the season to buy $35 and $40 suits and overcoats at $20, and such values don't last very long, either. Remember, these are not $20 suits or $20 overcoats. Never were, and never will be. All they have in common with anybody's $20 suit or overcoat is the price.

My $25 Service Guaranteed Suit or Overcoat for $15

For the fellow who doesn't want to spend $20, my $15 garments are wonders. Of course, this isn't a chance offering—it's established, and here to stay. I defy any clothier to show you its equal for any less than $25. Manufacturing everything myself under one roof and having no fancy store rent to pay enable me to give such extraordinary values at $15.
